The Hitman's Bodyguard ★★1/2 Perhaps you're too young to remember 1988's Midnight Run, or you'd rather just see an inferior version starring Ryan Reynolds and Samuel L. Jackson standing in for the Robert De Niro and Charles Grodin archetypes? Sure, this is the kind of movie that would endlessly entertain less-discerning viewers on Netflix, but audiences have nevertheless turned this fluffy action comedy into a late-summer hit at the multiplex. And while there are certainly smarter options currently in theaters, this amiable time-waster from director Patrick Hughes (the auteur behind The Expendables 3)—involving relentless, buttoned-up bodyguard Michael Bryce (Reynolds) and his mortal enemy, Darius Kincaid (Jackson), the notorious hit man he's been tasked with protecting—still has its dumb charms. One is the foul-mouthed performance by Salma Hayek, who matches Jackson, F-bomb for F-bomb, as Darius' wife Sonia. She's been captured by Interpol agent Amelia Roussel (Elodie Yung), who just happens to be Michael's ex. In order to free her, Darius will have to accompany Michael as they outrun assassination attempts from England to the Hague.

where he's scheduled to testify against Vladislav Dukhovich (Gary Oldman), the fictional dictator of Belarus. Sound convoluted? It is. But Hughes and writer Tom O'Connor keep things moving at a fast enough clip that you probably won't care until things bog down when the hit man and his bodyguard begin to respect each other. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Home Again ★★ It's not surprising that the 30-year-old daughter of divorced Oscar-nominated writers/directors Nancy Meyers (Something's Gotta Give, It's Complicated) and Charles Shyer (Baby Boom, Father of the Bride) would make her own writing and directing debut with a little help from mom and dad. Even less surprising is how culturally insulated and tone-deaf the dilemmas faced by the film's protagonists are. Hallie Meyers-Shyer has presumably written what she knows with Home Again, though a better title for this fantasy might be White Privilege. Her protagonist, recently separated Alice Kinney (Oscar-winner Reese Witherspoon) has just inherited a large bungalow from her late, Oscar-winning filmmaker father. Her mother, a beloved former actress named Lillian Stewart (Candice Bergen), convinces Alice to allow the three recent film school graduates who crashed the night before—Teddy (Nat Wolff), George (Jon Rudnitsky) and Harry (Pico Alexander)—to temporarily move into the adjacent guest house, rent-free. And why not, when these three absolute strangers who Alice met while celebrating her 40th birthday at a bar can help with her two young daughters, Isabel (Lola Flanery) and Rosie (Eden Grace Redfield) when they're not cooking dinner, building a website for her interior design business she started on a whim or becoming her sexual boy-toy? Oddly, much of this plays better than it should, if you have a taste for formula that's been served up with a silver spoon. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

I Do... Until I Don't ★★ If you had the good fortune of catching the limited run of 2013's In a World..., the writing/directing debut of actress Lake Bell, then the idea of a second feature written and directed by this solid supporting player (so good in What Happens in Vegas, It's Complicated and No Strings Attached) seemed promising. Or at least it was...until it wasn't. A title with an ellipsis felt fresh the first time, but like many of the ideas in this follow-up, it's long since passed its sell-by date. Bell is still writing from an insider's view of the film industry, but the movie-within-a-movie gimmick she employs in I Do... Until I Don't isn't nearly as novel or interesting as her earlier look at the competitive profession of movie-trailer voice-over artists. While she was able to attract a nice lineup of character actors to play couples struggling through marriage (Paul Reiser and Mary Steenburgen, Wyatt Cenac and Amber Heard, and Ed Helms opposite Bell herself), she mostly strands them in a fairly uninspiring premise. British actress Dolly Wells plays an uptight documentary filmmaker willing to bribe and coerce her subjects to prove her thesis that marriage is dead, even if that means destroying their lives. And yes, the results are about as unfunny as it sounds. Still, the actors do have notable chemistry with each other, giving the more dramatic moments a bit of heft. But while Bell lights up the screen with her smile, her sophomore effort feels like little more than an ellipsis... (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

It ★★1/2 The biggest surprise from Mama director Andy Muschietti's serviceable film adaptation of Stephen King's novel It is that it's become such a massive hit. Here's a sprawling story that's already been adapted to another medium (the 1990 TV miniseries starring Tim Curry as Pennywise the Dancing Clown), along with countless clones and imitators over the years, including last year's Netflix success story, Stranger Things, which counts this new version of It's Finn Wolfhard among its series cast. Here, Wolfhard plays Richie Tozier, the motormouthed comic relief of the Losers Club, a band of middle-school kids that King devotes half of his book to (the other half of his tome focuses on these children as adults) and are brought to life in Muschietti's movie by a talented group of mostly newcomers, including Sophia Lillis as the Losers' lone girl, Bev Marsh. The Book of Henry's Jaeden Lieberher brings some haunted soul to his role as stutterer Bill Denbrough, whose little brother Georgie (Jackson Robert Scott) is brutally devoured by the lagomorphic-looking Pennywise (Stellan Skarsgård's son and Alexander's brother, Bill). That's the opening scene of the film and it provides the only real chills the film has to offer. What we're left with is a group of good kids in a decent coming-of-age tale that could have been much more. But, as the closing credits threaten, this is just "Chapter One" of a two-part whole—and if Amy Adams doesn't show up as an older Bev, let's all demand a refund! (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Logan Lucky ★★★1/2 Oscar-winning director Steven Soderbergh returns to the big screen after a 4-year "retirement" with this comic thriller. Focused on a family of economically challenged West Virginians who attempt to change their luck with an absurd plan to rob North Carolina's Charlotte Motor Speedway during the Coca-Cola 600, the film may share some obvious parallels with Soderbergh's Ocean's Eleven and its two sequels. However, its DNA more closely resembles Magic Mike, the director's fictionalized look at actor Channing Tatum's early days making ends meet as a male stripper. First-time screenwriter Rebecca Blunt (reportedly Soderbergh's wife, entertainment reporter Jules Asner) shares Soderbergh's interest in exploring how a post-recession world has driven good people to do things they may not have otherwise considered, and she actually wrote the role of former construction worker Jimmy Logan with Alabama native Tatum in mind. Laid off due to a pre-existing condition, the divorced dad enlists the aid of his brother and sister—one-handed bartender Clyde (Adam Driver) and car-obsessed hairdresser Mellie (Riley Keough)—along with outside help from a demolition expert, appropriately named Joe Bang. There's just one problem: Joe is currently incarcerated. He's also played by a platinum-haired, heavily tattooed, Southern-twanged Daniel Craig, whose explosive lunacy serves as a reminder of how strong a character actor he was before he became synonymous with James Bond. This film is breezy fun and a welcome return for Soderbergh. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Patti Cake$ ★★★ While few have been begging for a distaff version of 8 Mile, debuting writer/director Geremy Jasper hustles and flows pretty hard to convince you that you have been. Certainly, it helps that the New Jersey native found a star in his female lead, Australian powerhouse Danielle Macdonald. She not only delivers a solid Jersey accent, but her rapping isn't half bad either—particularly since she'd never engaged in any freestyling before being cast as aspiring rapper Patti Dombrowski, also known as Patti Cake$. But while Macdonald gives a hugely sympathetic performance as the dreamer who's been unkindly dubbed "Dumbo" since middle school, Jasper doesn't do himself many favors by also including every other cliche in the book. There's the drunken, unsupportive parent still bitter about her own failed musical ambitions (Bridget Everett), the dismissive local rap titan (Sahr Ngaujah), the nerdy best friend who fuels her ambitions (Siddharth Dhananjay), the quiet loner and possible love interest (Mamoudou Athie) and the loving, raspy-voiced grandma who doesn't have long to live (Raging Bull's Cathy Moriarty). If you're worried that Jasper might show an ounce of restraint, he also borrows from the Rocky playbook. Despite these familiar notes—or maybe because of them—he's nevertheless created a rousing crowd-pleaser, complete with a "Lose Yourself"-like anthem that Patti performs during a climactic talent competition. Like Patti herself, the film is an underdog that you'll want to root for. (At Boston Common and Coolidge Corner.)

MUSIC

Edited by Sarah Hagman

BROTHERLY LOVE Nineties kids rejoice: Everyone's favorite longhaired band of brothers has returned with sleeker 'dos and a matured sound that brings them into the 21st century. Hanson's 25th anniversary tour lands in Boston shortly after the band's release of their Middle of Everywhere: The Greatest Hits compilation album. The group—which was first formed in 1992 by tween heartthrob brothers Isaac, Taylor and Zac—is best known for their infuriatingly catchy 1997 single "Mmmbop." Fast-forward to today, this group of 30-something dads has 12 children between them, all while continuing to tour and produce music over the past two decades. Nostalgia and new beginnings come together during this trio's world tour that stops at House of Blues on Oct. 1. / Julia Aparicio

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

LAND ROVERS The McMullen Museum of Art at Boston College is breaking ground on its fall exhibitions with two looks at landscapes. First up, Nature's Mirror: Reality and Symbol in Belgian Landscape chronologically traces the birth of the art form from the Middle Ages through the early 20th century with the help of professor Jeffrey Howe. He'll be on hand for a walk through the Daley Family Gallery on Sept. 24 to chat about the 120 rarely seen works from the likes of Antwerp printmaker Hieronymus Cock, School of Tervuren realists and symbolist painter Léon Spilliaert (whose Trunks of Beech Trees in Spring, 1945 is seen above). Elsewhere, professor Alston Conley paints the Maine and Massachusetts skies with collage techniques a la Matisse. Dial into these landlines at the McMullen Museum, where Nature's Mirror and New England Sky are on display through Dec. 10. / Sarah Hagman

GIVE TILL IT HURTS

More than 200 of Martha's Vineyard's A-listers were out in full force for the Morehouse College Legacy of Light reception, held at the Oak Bluffs mansion of former White House cabinet member Dr. Louis Sullivan and his lovely wife, Ginger.

Organized by the Greater Boston Morehouse College Alumni Association, the afternoon began with drinks and mingling on the upper lawn, and continued with a gourmet supper on a tent overlooking the saltwater pond.

Prominent among the crowd: the afternoon's honoree Charles Ogletree, filmmaker Spike Lee, former U.N. ambassador and mayor of Atlanta Andrew Young, Diddy posse member Derek Watkins (also known as Fonzworth Bentley), the stunning Shamika Baker, tennis addicts Kathy and Richard Taylor, Supreme Judicial Court Justice Kimberly Budd, Morehouse president Harold Martin, writer (and granddaughter of Nat King Cole) Caroline Clark Graves, restaurateur extraordinaire Darryl Settles, Harvard dean Ronald Sullivan, religious leaders Otis Moss Jr. and Otis Moss III, the uber-stylish Andrea Spence, Museum of African American History head Cheis Garrus, prep school muckety muck Mbakwe Okafor, Ethnic Online founder Leonard Webb, banking superhero Robert Clark Williams, Brazilian hottie Joel Gondim, and so on and so forth.

The weather held out despite predictions of rain, and although the rumor that the Obamas might drop by didn't pan out, it was a highly successful afternoon.

The best remark: When one of the speakers emphasized that this was a fundraiser and asked people to get out their checkbooks, he added, "It's not called MORE-house for nothing."

MEANWHILE, IN EDGARTOWN

The musical celebrity wattage was fairly blinding at Cocktails and Music in the Garden, a fundraiser for the transformative educational curriculum Consenses, held at the palatial waterfront home of Susan and Jim Swartz and co-hosted by their daughter-in-law Esmeralda, Back Bay beauty Mahsa Noble, island socialite Tamara Weiss and filmmaker Geralyn Dreyfous.

Present and accounted for: rock royalty Carly Simon, her daughter (and Consenses founder) Sally Taylor with husband Dean Bragonier, chip off the old block Ben Taylor with fiancee Sophie Hiller, Martha's Vineyard's voice of the angels Isaac Taylor, Grammy nominee John Forté, and soulful troubadour David Saw, who performed an intimate set (unfortunately not in the garden because of inclement weather, but in the comfort of the Swartz's mohair-upholstered living room). On-hand to marvel at their talent were the likes of poet and island grande dame Rose Styron, documentary filmmaker Rory Kennedy, Philadelphia Eagles co-owner Christina Lurie, environmental activist and philanthropist Laurie David, professor Carolyn Cohen, breathtaking blonde Monika McLennan, arts patron Ellen Poss, broadcasting babe Heather Unruh, rare horse breeder Francesca Kelly and her blue-blooded other half, Prince Raghuvendra Singh Dundlod (also known as Bonnie), and one woman who said, "I'm not leaving until I know my shoes aren't going to be destroyed by the rain."

Despite the drizzle, the afternoon was a thoroughly enjoyable affair, with rosé aplenty, delicious little nibbly things and the chance to see some of the world's most talented musicians playing in an intimate (but sumptuous) setting.

Most amusing moment: When Ben Taylor encouraged everyone to sing along to Harry Belafonte's "Jamaica Farewell," a few of the guests chimed in, while one said, "You're out of your fucking mind if you think I'm going to sing along with Carly Simon." ◆

ODE TO NOODLES

GROWING UP AS A KID WITH A lot of vowels in my last name, there were some Italian-American cliches I was told to avoid and there were some that I was taught to embrace. Glorifying the stereotype of an entire ethnicity as mumble-mouthed Mafia was a no-no. (Although I still can't attend a baptism without flashing back to The Godfather.) But there was never a problem promoting pasta as the lifeblood of Italians. Every year my grandparents would roll 1,200 meatballs for the church basketball league's banquet. And every month my mother would cook up a big vat of tomato sauce with meat that she'd store away for after-work dinners to feed our family of six. But the pasta scene in Boston has come a long way from those red sauce-soaked stereotypes. There's creative housemade pastas popping up on menus all across the city, and we took a look at a few in our cover story on the cuisine.

There's plenty of other stereotypes we're exploring in this Fall Dining issue. Scott Kearnan chats with a few restaurateurs that are bucking a recent trend by opening new eateries with white tablecloths. Jacqueline Houton taps into City Winery's formula, which will blend live music with a winery when it opens later this month. Sarah Hagman gets Jacques Pépin to dish on his latest cookbook, which features plenty of unexpected recipes from the French chef and his teenage granddaughter. And if you're looking for a different type of flavor, our Jonathan Soroff talks with Alan Cumming before his solo show at Sanders Theatre. Mangia!

We think you should know the answers. Know your farmer. Know where your food comes from. We think buying from farmers, vendors, and artisans should be as convenient as your corner store.

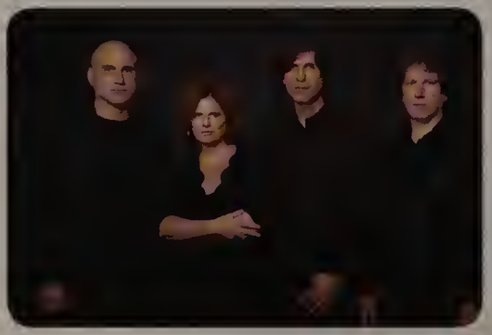
CHART-TOPPERS TAKE THE STAGE AT A NEW WINERY

BARRELS OF FUN: City Winery aims to host 300 shows a year at its Boston location

A Feast for the Senses

City Winery
1 Canal St., Boston (617-933-8047)
citywinery.com/boston

When Michael Dorf founded New York's Knitting Factory 30 years ago, beer was the beverage of choice for crowds taking in sounds from jazz innovators like John Zorn and rock acts like Sonic Youth. But he always liked wine. "I'm a big fan of Willamette pinot noirs from Oregon," says Dorf, who now savors his favorites during shows at his latest venture, City Winery, which pours 20 of its own made-on-premises vinos and 400 other bottles from around the world into specialized glassware from centuries-old Austrian maker Riedel. No plastic cups here.

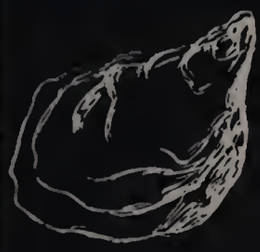


But music is still the main event. The winery, restaurant and concert venue's fifth location, City Winery Boston, will host 300 shows a year after it opens on Oct. 16 with a performance by Max Weinberg's Jukebox, which has the longtime E Street Band drummer fielding requests from a menu of 200 songs. Such headliners will perform in a room with table seating for 300, but Dorf is also excited about the opportunities afforded by a second stage in a smaller space dubbed the Haymarket Lounge. "We can probably squeeze about 100 standing in there for a show, so it's actually a good little room. It's about the same size as the original Knitting Factory in New York back in 1987. It allows us to be very artistically free. We're talking to everyone from some jazz promoters in town to the Berklee School of Music," Dorf says. "To have a room where we can have a poetry reading or a wine tasting to benefit hurricane victims, it gives us a lot more flexibility. We don't have that in New York, so it's a luxury to have a second room to play around with."

The 30,000-square-foot complex at 1 Canal St. also includes a Mediterranean restaurant with views of the stainless-steel fermentation tanks and French oak barrels in the adjoining glass-walled winery. Lees from the winemaking process wind up in the flatbread pizzas, and much of the wine ends up in kegs with an argon tap system that allows for easy by-the-glass imbibing. To prime our palates, we had national wine director Rachel Speckan pour glasses to pair with three of Dorf's top shows from the fall concert lineup. / Jacqueline Houton

Art Garfunkel · Oct. 26-27

"Art Garfunkel brings resonance and longevity to the stage," Speckan says of the folk-rock icon, who's performing two shows fresh off the release of his memoir What Is It All but Luminous. She toasted him with the 2016 City Winery Reserve Chardonnay, a sip she calls "graceful, poised and balanced with a flavorful touch of French oak that harmonizes with the toasty lees, silky texture and ripe orchard fruits."



Cowboy Junkies · Nov. 2

"Funky, dirty and earthy music requires a wine of the same kind," Speckan says, uncorking the 2014 Flowers Vineyard Pinot Noir from California's Sea View Ridge Estate Vineyard to complement the alt-country stalwarts' sound. "The Cowboy Junkies inspire this pairing with brambly wild blueberry, tea leaf and wildflowers with gritty spice and rich undertones of structure and serious oak aging."

Shawn Colvin · Nov. 3

"Fresh and breezy lyrics turn gravelly and deep as Shawn Colvin renders an emotional musical moment," says Speckan, who paired the singer/songwriter with the 2014 Domaine Vincent Paris "Granit 30" from France's Northern Rhone Valley. "This wine springs from the deep granite and the low point of the hill in Cornas, blended with the tip-top of the hill, creating a wine of depth and weight with lifted aromatics and surprising grip. Violets, plum, pepper and a dash of rusticity pair perfectly with this lovely lady."

ART OF CRAFT

AN EASTIE EATERY BLENDS NEW AND OLD

CRAFT TABLE & BAR
107 Porter St., Boston
crafttableondbar.com

The group behind Craft Table & Bar is banking on a mix of nostalgia and innovation for its new East Boston restaurant, slated to open at the end of October. Frank Peace, CEO of New England Craft Restaurant Concepts, chose to repurpose some design elements from its past life as Ecco Boston and Al Sablone's Veal 'n' Vintage while putting the group's own touch on most of the space.

"One of the things we wanted to be was approachable to everybody that lives within the community," Peace says. "We wanted it to be warm and welcoming, yet feel polished enough that you could go out and have a wonderful date or a business meeting."

While customers might recognize the wall of famous signatures located in the back of the restaurant and the black-tile backsplash behind the bar, the rest of Craft Table & Bar has been renovated to set a rustic atmosphere that's filled with refurbished wooden tables to seat about 90 people. The soft blue hue of the freshly painted walls complements the large mural of East Boston hanging in the dining room. Created by a local father and son, the 2011 commission had until recently been hanging outside the building. And while the Eastie location factored into the interior of the restaurant, it also had an equally large impact on the menu.

"There's sort of a renaissance going on in East Boston," Peace says. "There's all kinds of real estate development happening, and old and new are melding together. I think that's really a cool thing. As we started to go through the menu, I wanted to incorporate a little old and a little new."

The menu from the scratch kitchen is a combination of sentimental favorites—Stella's Chicken Parm is a recipe that has been in Peace's wife's family for more than 100 years—and new creations such as the char-grilled N'awlins Oysters with garlic butter and asiago crumbs. The restaurant will also have a 20-tap system in place that houses craft beers, and a cocktail menu will feature drinks like the Bennington Bramble, a take on a bourbon bramble featuring Triple 8 Nor'Easter Bourbon and muddled blackberries.

With craft-centric offerings, Peace expects his latest culinary venture to find its foothold in East Boston. The location is the first in Boston proper for the rapidly expanding New England Craft Restaurant Concepts, which has a coffee chain—Brew on the Grid—in addition to a few other Worcester-based spots.

"Boston is one of the most unbelievable cities in the world, and East Boston is just an iconic place that we had to be," Peace says. "This to me says, 'As restaurateurs you've arrived.'"

Good Eats: BBQ Dreams

Brother-and-sister team Edward and Shawn Wilson grew up in Texas, so the idea of opening a BBQ joint was always in the back of their minds after introducing their Viga locations throughout town. Shed's BBQ, which opened in Downtown Crossing earlier this year, fulfills those dreams and fills the plates of customers with a variety of smoked meats available in a sandwich, platter or bowl. "What we want to do is take the barbecue we grew up with and introduce it with a healthy kick—so you can also have it in a bowl," Shawn says. If you're looking for a guilty pleasure, try the two-meat platter that can include sliced brisket smoked for seven-and-a-half hours as well as another meat such as pulled pork or Texas hot links. It comes with cornbread and a choice of two sides such as pepper jack-loaded mac-and-cheese and baked beans with some brown sugar and caramelized onions for a touch of sweetness. And don't forget to add the traditional Texas dipping sauce made with the brisket drippings for some extra kick. / Matt Martinelli

Kitchen Aid

Jacques Pépin has a new sous-chef. His 13-year-old granddaughter joins him in the kitchen for his latest cookbook, A Grandfather's Lessons: In the Kitchen with Shorey—which, according to his own count, puts Pépin at more than 30 published tomes. The renowned French chef drops by Copley Place's Sur La Table on Oct. 8 and then Harvard Book Store hosts him at the Brattle Theatre on Oct. 9, but not before Pépin dishes on proper etiquette and tons of hot dogs. / Soroh Hogmon

WHAT'S IT LIKE PUTTING TOGETHER A COOKBOOK WITH A TEENAGER? I'm faster than she is with knives, but she's much faster with her hands than I am with her iPhone. It's another world. In a sense, it gives us a chance to communicate on a level that she's comfortable with and I'm comfortable with so that's a great thing, not only the cooking, especially the sitting around the table and eating. It's spending time together, and one conversation leads to another conversation.

ONE OF THE RECIPES INVOLVES CURLY DOGS. WHAT OTHER INVENTIVE PREPARATIONS OF HOT DOGS WERE YOU WORKING ON WHILE AT HOWARD JOHNSON'S AS THE HEAD OF RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT? I remember putting them in lentil soup. I remember cooking them with sauerkraut, as we do in France. I remember roasting them with potatoes and onions, with all the sausage mixed together—different types of things that people are not conventionally used to. I was there for 10 years trying new equipment and trying new recipes, so we produced like, I don't know, three tons of hot dogs a day.

OTHER RECIPES INVOLVE JELL-O AND ENGLISH MUFFIN PIZZAS—MAYBE NOT DISHES READERS WOULD EXPECT. People may think of me as the quintessential French chef, and then you take any of my books. The last one I did, you open to page 22, you have a black bean soup with banana, because [I'm] married to a woman born in New York but from a Cuban father and Puerto Rican mother. Then the next page you have a salad with fried chicken and you have a New England lobster roll. So after over half a century in America, I'm probably the quintessential American chef. In that context, I've loved Jell-O from the first moment I was here.

WERE THERE ANY FOODS YOU DIDN'T LIKE EATING AS A CHILD THAT YOU ENJOY NOW? Yes. I mean, olives were too strong, which I love olives now. Even mushrooms, I thought mushrooms were very strong, which now I enjoy.

YOU ALSO TOUCH ON ETIQUETTE TIPS. DO YOU FIND THAT THERE'S ONE RULE THAT'S MOST OFTEN BROKEN? It's probably sitting down before everyone else and starting to eat before anyone starts. It's not like we are very formal at home, but I think it's nice to have a little bit of custom and traditions and habits. Every night—today's my anniversary actually—for 51 years we've been sitting down at the table, my wife and I, and it's not like it's very formal. But I wait for her to start and we sit down and share a bottle of wine and we enjoy our dinner.

As the autumn leaves turn, you might find yourself turning the pages of some new local cookbooks. We got a taste of three new titles from culinary talents releasing this fall. / Cathryn Haight

Joanne Chang says she was inspired by a decade of celebration, joy and dumplings for Myers + Chang at Home (available now), a collection of recipes from her South End eatery that includes tea-smoked pork spare ribs and mama Chang's dumplings. The recipes from Chang and executive chef Karen Akunowicz easily translate for home cooks and taste just as scrumptious as the restaurant originals, even if you don't have a gas-fired wok. "Many people say they can't cook Asian food," Chang says. "We were determined to show them that it's not hard once you learn some basics."

Townsman's Matt Jennings explores his New England roots in his debut cookbook, Home Grown (available on Oct. 17), which features recipes for comfort food classics—many of which are served at his downtown brasserie—along with heartfelt anecdotes that tie the dishes to Jennings. "The book isn't a 'cheffy' coffee table book. It is meant to be cooked from. Spilled on. Dusted with flour and handed down to the next generation," Jennings says. "I wanted a cookbook for people who love to cook."

Hadley and TJ Douglas, the team behind the South End's Urban Grape, match bottle to bite in Drink Progressively (available on Nov. 1), featuring executive-chef-approved recipes and a guide to the couple's trademark scale to get you wine savvy in no time. "We knew that the progressive scale—our way of arranging, thinking and talking about wine in relation to its body, not varietal or region—made sense to us and our customers, but it wasn't until we sat down to organize and write the book that we really saw the science behind it," Hadley Douglas says. "The technical parts of the book were the hardest to write."

RIESLING'S RISE

Riesling's earliest documentation dates back to 1435 in Germany, and although not wildly popular today, this is the white wine with the most astonishing and dramatic rainbow of expressions. Few wines start a meal better, and none enhance as wide a range of culinary preparations. So why is it unpopular? Pronunciation. But in the current market, German riesling is the screaming bargain. Fresh, low in alcohol content and redolent of garden fragrances, these three vary in style and are all irresistibly delicious. / Sandy Block

DR. HEYDEN, OPPENHEIMER SACKTRÄGER RIESLING AUSLESE, RHEINHESSEN, 2015

Don t miss this $16 Auslese from a great vintage This wine is ultra-lush and pineappley, but with only about 5 percent noble rot in this warm, dry year. Flowery, gentle and mild in acidity, it bears a fragrance of ripe tropical fruits, with bright lemon zest notes, creamy sweetness and a lively zip of saline minerality from the vineyard's limestone soils. It s great with spicy curries, and—as is true of the next two rieslings—this can age for years.

REICHSGRAF VON KESSELSTATT, SCHARZHOFBERGER RIESLING KABINETT, MOSEL, 2015

Produced in the cool climate of Saar Valley, this bottle is made from grapes grown on rocky gray slate soils at a 1,000-foot elevation. With close to perfect conditions, 2015 is already a legendary vintage in Germany, and the openness of this wine is remarkable considering that Scharzhofbergers often taste tight during infancy. It's on the dry side, with subtle white peach, floral, stony mineral and lemon notes, and is a great partner for shellfish.

Keys to Success

The Boston Typewriter Orchestra has been click-clacking away for more than a decade. The orchestra has been on The Today Show and has played in festivals and at museums. But for a few members of the eight-person ensemble, this year—with the official release of a vinyl album—marked a big step for the analog lovers.

"A few of us are record collectors and having ourselves pressed into wax was a big step," says Jeff Breeze of the Boston Typewriter Orchestra. Featuring three founding members, the band arranges original songs during its weekly practice sessions in East Boston and during his free time, Breeze is often stopping by yard sales to check out old manual typewriters. "Each machine has different features and different qualities that make different sounds, and it's a matter of harnessing them to do what we want to create particular results. Nothing in the attic has ribbon in it, so they are only good for making music—not letters—at this point."

The machines will get a work out when the BTO plays at Cape Ann Cinema's Doctoberfest on Oct. 13 as well as a couple other Bay State spots before a Dec. 7 show at the Boston Public Library's new Jamaica Plain branch. The busy fall season comes on the heels of publicity from documentary California Typewriter, which was released this year and features the BTO alongside other typewriter admirers including Tom Hanks and John Mayer.

"The release of California Typewriter has brought us to a whole different audience as well," Breeze says. "The attention we get has opened up lots of other doors for us." / Matt Martinelli

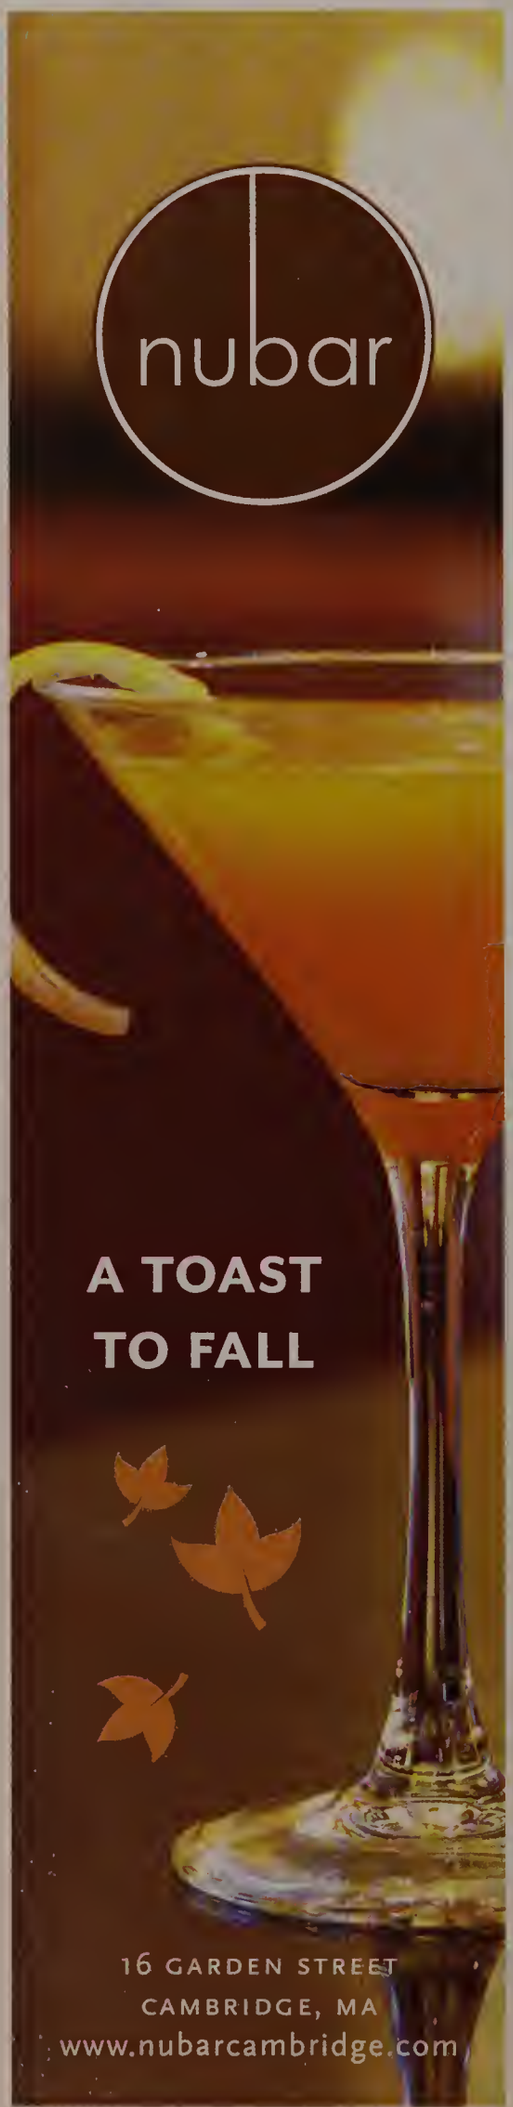
PIRATE BOOTY

A BOOK LOVER'S LIFE TAKES A HARROWING TURN

The Romance Reader's Guide to Life
by Sharon Pywell
Published by Flatiron Books, 305 pages, $26

WEAVING TOGETHER MANY dimensions, Boston author Sharon Pywell wittily prances from one viewpoint to the next in her latest novel. Two sisters, Neave and Lilly, get together after World War II in Lynn to start a Mary-Kay-style cosmetics company. But, as sisters can be, they're different.



From the start of the book, Pywell introduces the reader to Lilly in the afterlife, foreshadowing her demise as a woman who is reckless and feckless with men, a neglectful mother who continues to reject Neave's worries about her dangerous second husband, Ricky. As an escape, the introverted Neave often turns to a pirate-romance book she found as a child that still ignites her otherwise hidden self. In that book within a book, a working-class sexpot Electra, also a daring feminist, deals with dangerous brothers who battle each other aboard a ship, fighting for this petticoat-wearing-yet-nimble heroine. Pywell prints passages from the fictional tale in this novel, at times mirroring the actual plot. After Lilly vanishes, she reappears alongside the sisters' deceased, frisky dog, Mr. Boppit. From beyond, Lilly and Mr. Boppit advise and protect Neave who is running the business while also running from the abusive Ricky who has seemingly murdered Lilly.

Pywell plays wonderfully with irony; the wild sister, now more balanced in death, helps her sensible sister deal with danger on earth. Neave's own life echoes the pirate book's storyline as she negotiates between two brothers, Ricky and his more reasonable brother. And when booming business success comes along, romance soon follows.

FROM PAGE 138: "Even though my early training for Be Your Best parties had given me some competence with makeup, I'd still let Lilly give advice on wardrobe. She'd been disgusted that I hadn't asked him where we were going. 'The ladies' room at Locke Ober needs an entirely different look than the benches at Durgin Park.'" ◆

Traveler's Check

Port Townsend is home to several hundred deer that nonchalantly wander the city streets and parks, and even have their own Facebook page. Remember to check yourself for ticks.

PORT TO CALL: Port Townsend provides calm delights such as the Swan Hotel.

SOUND ESCAPE

PORT TOWNSEND OFFERS CHARM REMOVED FROM SEATTLE'S BUZZ

LOCATED ON THE EDGE OF WASHINGTON'S spectacularly scenic Olympic Peninsula, Port Townsend is Seattle taken to the extreme—an offbeat, hippie city that promises nirvana to those who find the Emerald City too urban, too crowded and too culturally conservative.

From the hustle and bustle, it's an easy two-hour drive across the Puget Sound to the quieter escape, and getting there is a worthwhile adventure. First, you'll cross the Tacoma Narrows Bridge, whose predecessor was the notorious "Galloping Gertie." Built in 1940, the narrow suspension bridge undulated wildly in the wind and dramatically collapsed after four months, and the catastrophe was captured on grainy black and white film. Fortunately, the sole casualty was a cocker spaniel whose owner failed to lure him out of his stranded car, which plunged into the water. You'll also drive over the Evergreen Point Floating Bridge—the world's longest of its kind—which spans Lake Washington. At six lanes wide and 7,708 feet long, this pontoon bridge opened just last year and is constructed of precast concrete that makes it feel reassuringly stable.

Once you reach Port Townsend, check into the Swan Hotel. With its water views and windows open to ocean breezes, it's a pleasant spot that's well-located at the edge of downtown. If you've arrived hungry on a Wednesday or Saturday, walk a few blocks to the uptown farmers market and proceed directly to the Cape Cleare salmon cart for its renowned sandwich: a generous portion of salmon on toasted local ciabatta that's slathered with a creamy sorrel sauce and stuffed with lightly dressed greens. Prefer cheese? Check out Mount Townsend Creamery, especially for the rich, creamy Seastack that's dusted in vegetable ash and sea salt. And there's plenty more to explore at one of the biggest small-town farmers markets in the country. More than 70 vendors tap the primary agricultural area of the eastern Olympic Peninsula to offer everything from Breton crepes to bonsai trees.

Another excellent food choice is Alchemy Bistro and Wine Bar. Note that the "bar bites" menu is available beginning at 3 pm, so if you just want to nibble on housemade pâté, chorizo-stuffed dates or local oysters, this is the place. When it comes to satisfying caffeine fixes, coffee shops abound. The most demanding standards can be met at Velocity by baristas who can whip up a velvety steamed milk, swirled with a monogram of cinnamon.

Port Townsend is famous for its charming Victorian architecture and its status as a maritime center. If you drop into Brion Toss Yacht Riggers, a shop on the Point Hudson Marina, you'll find the eponymous owner is as charming as he is ruggedly handsome, always amenable to demonstrating knots with the flair of a magician. Also entertaining is the city's Free Speech corner, where whiteboards bear detailed, handwritten opinions on political matters, and a banner rippling in the breeze invites passing drivers to "Honk if You Support Free Speech." The locals revel in their cherished position outside the mainstream, with local shops selling popular T-shirts that are printed with two semi-official slogans: "Port Townsend: Proud to Be a Little Dinghy" and "We're All Here Because We're Not All There."

When you feel like mellowing out a bit, head to nearby Chimacum, where you'll find the Chimacum Cannabis Company. Recently named one of the best dispensaries in America by High Times, the store is located in an airy farmhouse and open daily from 8 am to 10 pm, ready to fulfill all your medical and recreational marijuana needs with items from flowers and suppositories to tinctures and edibles.

While still in town, you must stop by Finnriver Farm & Cidery, a lovingly restored dairy farm where you can sit in a lawn chair on the patio and admire views of the fruit orchards and seemingly endless green space. Play bocce or croquet and, of course, sample the ciders, created from the organic fruit of more than 6,000 trees. Although the property is open every day for tastings, the farm is at its liveliest on weekends, when musicians take the (small) stage and local food purveyors serve dishes ranging from sweet and savory crepes and galettes to wood-fired pizza. It's a little off the beaten track, more than a little intoxicating and absolutely delightful—much like Port Townsend itself. ◆

SUMIAO BUILDS A PATHWAY TO HUNANESE CUISINE FOR THE UNINITIATED

In certain Boston food-nerd circles, there's a popular parlor game: What Cuisines Is Our Scene Still Missing? "Georgian cuisine," one friend likes to muse (meaning Eastern European). "High-end Korean," I often chime in. Until recently, you could have said, "Hunanese fare," despite the few token dishes served at some Sichuan restaurants—Sichuan and Hunan are culinarily close. That gap recently closed with the advent of Kendall Square's new Sumiao Hunan Kitchen. The space has the high ceilings, industrial sparseness and bright colors common to the nearby restaurants attracted in recent years by cheap rents and liquor licenses—but it also has some uncommonly beautiful paintings. There's a private room in the back that seems built to host PowerPoint presentations. The bar features bottles of baiju ($118-$288), the ferocious Chinese spirit. But given the vaguely corporate ambiance, it's easy to wonder how traditional the food will be.

Chef Xinke Tan and De Wu at times appear to be pulled in two directions. There's something elemental and impeccably traditional in appetizers like spicy crunchy cucumber ($8) and its solidly fiery dressing of sesame and chili oils as well as the generous plate of mala duck ($9), cold slices with more of the mild capsicum fire common to many Hunanese dishes, but none of the Sichuan peppercorn its name would suggest. Avocado meatballs ($9) have a pleasantly crunchy exterior and a mild, finely textured, nicely salty meat center reminiscent of ground chicken (actually pork, egg and tofu), plus a squiggle of slightly chili-tinged mayo on top, though no avocado flavor is discernible. Might you expect a plate of stir-fried cabbage like Shaoshan cabbage ($15) to be delectable? If not, you might be surprised at the lovely interplay of garlic and vinegar in this dish, its vivid tang being another hallmark of the cuisine.

Sumiao gyoza ($10) is another simple, exquisitely executed dish, fine-grained pork filling wrappers well-browned and well-crisped by pan-frying, served with a soy sauce dip. But handmade soup bao ($12) break two promises. They look machine made, nothing like the gorgeous, clearly handmade version on the restaurant's Instagram feed, and they hide barely any juicy melted aspic. A plate of scallion steamed twisty rolls ($12) is far lovelier: mild, tenderly doughy and substantial. Noodle dishes feature some ravishing flavors, like the rich, fatty goodness of red-braised beef shank atop the beef noodle soup ($12), chili-oil heat and salty umami of fermented black beans. But the rice noodles are so overdone as to disintegrate into globby pieces in the bowl, a grave kitchen error that robs us of the pleasures of slurping. Beef and egg noodles ($12) likewise offer virtuous contrast in textures and flavors, with more good beef slices, a hard-boiled egg, fierce little lightly pickled fresh peppers and whole skin-on peanuts; but again, the rice noodles underneath are also disastrously overcooked.

Entrees take a decided upswing, beginning with red-braised pork ($25), a quintessential Hunan dish in which each bite of fatty, chewy, chunky belly reveals alternating notes of blazing red pepper, garlic and darkly rich soy sauce. Hometown chicken wok ($16) swings lighter, all brightness in ginger, scallions and garlic. Lava fish ($24) skillfully cooks up filets of swai, a popular freshwater catfish from Southeast Asia, in a salty-tangy black bean soy sauce, though the fish is so mild as to be mistakable for farmed tilapia. Beef on fire ($18) delivers the advertised flame-throwing goods with double barrels of red chilies and banana peppers. And yes, we tried General Tso's chicken ($16), the hero of a thousand bastardized American-Chinese restaurant meals, though Sumiao claims its version is closer to the '60s-vintage, Hunan-inspired, Taiwanese banquet dish. It is slightly less syrupy-sweet than many American versions, though the batter-fried coating is disappointingly, familiarly thick.

We did not sample the dessert menu's variety of very Western chocolate-based concoctions ($10-$13), though the purple yam buns ($10) we ordered earlier, with their creamy-sweet filling of white taro, would have served admirably for this course. The bar has a list of specialty cocktails—some of them baiju-based (most $14), plus some modernized Tiki cocktails ($12)—which offer some pretty, not-very-boozy sipping, though all lean on the sweet side. The beer list (six drafts, $7-$10; four packaged, $6.50-$14) favors crafty local brewers, with a couple of food-friendly, light-bodied adjunct pilsners from Asia tossed in. The list of 25 wines ($36-$68) is serviceably modest, ditto the seven sake options ($17-$55 per bottle).

Service runs from the affable and polished to the well-meaning but rougher-edged, dosing one customer with errant sauce during bussing. More concerning is how kitchen pacing can be off-kilter to the point of distraction: Trundling out too many courses at once means that hot entrees sit cooling on the table while a party works through smaller cold plates and bao traditionally eaten first. Despite many hard surfaces in the dining room, the noise level supports easy conversation even at peak periods. In the end, the pleasures that Sumiao offers are plentiful enough, if still a little too slick and bowdlerized for seekers of more traditional flavors. Those braver souls will still have to venture out to the suburbs—to places like Malden and Quincy, and for Hunanese, to Sei Bar in Wakefield—where a growing number of Chinese restaurateurs are finding an audience for unapologetic regional flavors in more modest, less chichi settings. ◆

ASK CHERYL

Q: I HAVE SOME BROWN SUN SPOTS (AGE SPOTS) ON MY FACE. WHAT'S THE BEST WAY TO GET RID OF THEM?

A: Brown sunspots, age spots, and freckles develop on the parts of our body that are prone to sun exposure. Luckily, these unsightly spots can be lightened or eliminated with IPL (Intense Pulsed Light) treatments.

IPL, sometimes referred to as a photo-facial, is a safe, FDA- approved method of utilizing flashes of light energy to break up the melanin that forms brown spots. The melanin breaks apart and is absorbed by your body, eliminating the brown spots. The procedure is quick and there is no downtime. The procedure can also clear up brown spots on the chest and hands.

Once the brown spots are gone, we have some effective topical skin care products containing anti-oxidants and other ingredients that can that help prevent the spots from returning.

A POOR FIT

THE THRILL IS GONE IN THIS MISMARKETED AND TONE-DEAF SEQUEL

KINGSMAN: THE GOLDEN CIRCLE ★½

Starring Taron Egerton, Colin Firth, Mark Strong, Julianne Moore, Pedro Pascal, Edward Holcroft, Channing Tatum, Halle Berry, Hanna Alström, Björn Granath, Lena Endre, Sophie Cookson, Michael Gambon, Bruce Greenwood, Emily Watson, Jeff Bridges and Elton John. Written by Jane Goldman and Matthew Vaughn, based on the comic book The Secret Service by Mark Millar and Dave Gibbons. Directed by Vaughn. At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.

Writer/director Matthew Vaughn and regular collaborator/co-screenwriter Jane Goldman took many viewers and critics by surprise with their 2014 hit, Kingsman: The Secret Service. Loosely based on a comic book series and set in the present, it was an affectionately winking, post-modern take on spy movies that took aim squarely at the 1970s-era films of the James Bond franchise, with Oscar winner Colin Firth tapping into his inner Roger Moore as gentleman spy Harry Hart, also known as "Galahad." In this critic's estimation, the wildly entertaining homage was the most delectable iteration of the Bond formula since 2006's Casino Royale, the franchise's first with Daniel Craig.

Vaughn's sequel, Kingsman: The Golden Circle, subverts the Bond template even further, as he and Goldman's script now finds Hart's protégé, Gary "Eggsy" Unwin (Taron Egerton) living with Tilde (Hanna Alström as the Swedish princess he rescued in the first film), rather than turning her into a disposable fling like the bulk of Bond's more casual conquests. Likewise, you'd probably never find Bond willingly diving into a shit-filled sewer in order to keep a date with his beloved as Eggsy does at the conclusion of this film's opening action scene. But then, it's doubtful that even Galahad's gentleman spy would have chosen to soil one of his immaculate double-breasted suits from Kingsman Tailors, the esteemed Savile Row shop that has served as the front for an independent British Secret Service since its founding in 1849. "The suit is the modern gentleman's armor," Galahad once told his then-hoodie and hightop-wearing charge, before Eggsy's mentor was slain near the end of the first film's second act by Samuel L. Jackson's Valentine.

The theme is recycled with the introduction of the Statesmen, setting up another culture clash.

As is customary, the enemies had previously met over dinner, during which Valentine asked Galahad, "Do you like spy movies?" Without missing a beat, the Kingsman replied, "I always felt that the old Bond films were only as good as the villain." Which brings us to one of The Golden Circle's many unfortunate deficiencies.

As Poppy Adams, Oscar winner Julianne Moore sedately underplays her role as the film's Big Bad. On paper, the head of the mysterious Golden Circle criminal enterprise is like a Martha Stewart gone very, very wrong, but the actress never really locates the proper notes of menacing peppiness that would have made the role sing. That's a shame, considering the wonderful playground that production designer Darren Gilford (Star Wars: The Force Awakens) and returning art director Joe Howard have created.

Poppyland, as its red neon signage proclaims, is the sociopathic drug lord's lair-cum-theme park. Even though Poppy's dope-dealing deeds have exiled her from her homeland, she's transformed the ancient ruins in her secret swath of jungle in Southeast Asia into a spectacular reminder of the country she gave up, a glistening ode to Main Street Americana, by way of the 1950s—including a bowling alley, a beauty salon, a movie palace and a diner that doubles as her office. At the center of this hep eatery sits a shiny meat-grinder large enough to be a wood chipper—and viewers of 1996's Fargo can probably guess how Poppy will utilize the menacing mincing machine.

But while the violence is still turned up to 11, the first film's theme of two worlds colliding—served so well by the dynamic of the dapper spy who taught a street tough not only the art of hand-to-hand combat, but also how to tie a Windsor knot—has been drastically diluted due to the absence of Galahad, a code name that Eggsy took on after the death of his teacher. Instead, the theme is recycled with the introduction of the Statesmen, setting up another culture clash as Galahad 2.0 and the Q-like Merlin (Mark Strong, great in an expanded role) flee to America after a series of bombs kills the rest of the Kingsmen. They seek the help of the Kingsmen's cowpoke counterparts—Tequila (Channing Tatum), Whiskey (Pedro Pascal from Netflix's Narcos, channeling Smokey and the Bandit-era Burt Reynolds), Ginger Ale (Oscar winner Halle Berry) and their boss, Champagne, also known as Champ (Oscar winner Jeff Bridges).

But the stellar pedigree of the cast can't save the problematic film, which features unexpected tedium (Elton John's cameo is funny the first time, not so much the fifth), a second-rate henchman (Edward Holcroft doesn't cut nearly as deep as The Secret Service's Sofia Boutella) and surprisingly subpar, CGI-reliant action. It's enough to make you appreciate the original's scatology. ◆

Music / Paul Robicheau

SUPER FAR

FRIENDS SHARE A NATURAL AFFINITY FOR FORGING SPARSE COMMERCIAL POP

Paul Klein's first shot at making it in LA fell woefully short. "I had no promises, no opportunities, really no friends," says the singer/guitarist, who rented a small Hollywood apartment and drove a U-Haul there from his native Oklahoma.

"It was kind of tough—I have a college degree and I applied to bag groceries at Trader Joe's and got turned down," says Klein, 29, who endured similar results at a bank and Whole Foods. "I wound up getting picked up off the street to do some modeling. That fell right into my lap and really helped pay my bills for a while."

His music career, however, wasn't paying off. After six months, he called his drummer friend Jake Goss who he'd met in Nashville and like Klein attended Butler University. Klein wanted to head to Nashville and write with Goss and Les Priest, another friend and Butler alum who studied audio engineering. The band LANY (its name echoing the coastal hubs of LA and NY and pronounced lay-nee) was born.

"It really came together naturally," Klein says. "We had limited equipment to use and we still do it the same way. We make all our stuff on Les' Dell computer. At the time, we had a microKORG, which is a really small synthesizer. We had a bass synth and we had a drum machine. That was literally it. We took what we had and made it work. That kind of defined our sound. Our limitations defined our craft."

The trio's dreamy, minimalist electro-pop yields cleanly shaped melodies, perky rhythms (often recalling finger-snaps) and Klein's plaintive, conversational lyrics, shared on a series of EPs and now a full-length eponymous debut that came out this summer.

"I fall in love really quick and hard, and when I'm out, I'm out. I've never lingered on a breakup."

"We value the sonic space that lives in our songs," Klein says from his new LA digs. "You can start layering things, and it becomes pretty unnecessary and sounds like everything else in the world."

Not that he doesn't appreciate the commonplace in the language of lyrics. The singer says that he long worshipped John Mayer for speaking directly to conflicted feelings in a relationship. "You always know what the guy's talking about, and that's why I write the way that I write, 'cause I speak pretty plainly," Klein says. "My mom always taught me to say what you mean and mean what you say."

Klein wrote lyrics for the album during a relationship that was both satisfying and frustrating, he says. "I fall in love really quick and hard, and when I'm out, I'm out. I've never lingered on a breakup. And for the most part, I never talk to the person again after we've broken up. I'm pretty all or nothing. I'm zero to a hundred."

If that sounds like the speed of LANY's ascent, it wasn't quite that sudden. Sure, the group began fielding record label offers within weeks of posting its first music on Soundcloud in 2014. But LANY slowly built its millennial following, becoming one of Spotify's most streamed discoveries, and is currently on a tour that hits House of Blues on Oct. 11 and features tracks off its new album (graced by the smooth single "Super Far").

"The songs that we put out were commercial in the beginning, but we had very strong indie cred, and I find it so fascinating that the bigger you get, people start taking that away from you," Klein says, noting they didn't even post a photo of the band online for a year, instead using a picture of NBA icons Michael Jordan and Magic Johnson. "People in Europe unfamiliar with American basketball thought that was us, making music."

Sports took a back seat to a strict focus on music at a young age, with Klein's mother insisting on piano lessons. "My mom went through a lot of trauma," he says, noting her father left when she was 3, inspiring the lyric in "Hericane": "I know your heart hurts the most at 3 a.m., I know he left before you could even know him."

"She pushed me so hard," Klein says. "Being a mother was like her highest calling. She just wanted me to be the absolute best, and I can't fault her for that." ◆

SHAME ON ME

A CERTAIN TABOO FEELING CAN BE A GREAT MOTIVATOR

A FEW WEEKS AGO, THERE WAS AN article in The New Yorker about a club for new parents called Loom. The club's guidelines include the stipulation that members not shame each other. OK, fine. That makes sense, even though it's strange to have to explicitly tell people not to be horrible to one another. But then they add, "We also prefer that you don't shame yourself." Whoa, back up, Loom: I'm down with the idea that you shouldn't be a malicious bastard toward others. But I absolutely reserve the right to be a malicious bastard to myself. America runs on Dunkin', but I run on shame.

And shame is taboo these days. You no longer make fun of your roommate for returning from a walk of shame. You congratulate them on their Morning Stroll of Self-Affirmation in Rumpled Evening Attire. Is there shame in the game? I'm told that no, there ain't. And if you fool someone once, what happens? Nothing, that's what. It was a mistake to believe your fib, but everyone makes mistakes. And the same would hold true of a second fooling.

I am an outlier, I suppose, because I possess a keenly honed sense of shame and it serves me well. Shame keeps me from getting too fat. Shame helps me hold down my job. I'm not always very charitable, but shame certainly is. The other day, shame even cleaned my garage. My neighbor came over to borrow some WD-40 and I had to rummage among a mess of randomly strewn tools, toys and seldom-used sporting goods. Oh, the shame! By the time he came back to return the can, the place was cleaner than a surgical theater. Shame is my assistant. You want to know why I did something? Hold on, let me put you in touch with shame.

Many people confuse shame with embarrassment. They're different. You can have embarrassment without shame, and vice versa. Like if I were giving a speech in front of a thousand people and my pants fell down, I would feel embarrassment but not shame. But when I don't tip a busker, I feel shame but not embarrassment. That's because embarrassment usually requires a witness. Since nobody else is privy to the tortured internal deliberations caused by that open ukulele case—the smallest bill I have is a five, and is this rendition of "Somewhere Over the Rainbow" really worth a five?—I'm not embarrassed when I avoid eye contact and step up my pace. But I am ashamed. Of course I am.

And yes, it's entirely possible to order the shame-and-embarrassment combo. In eighth grade, I represented my school at the county spelling bee. I got cocky in the first round and breezed through "unique," forgetting the second "u." Eliminated, just like that. And I was wearing a leather bomber jacket, like I was cool. Yeah, Mr. Cool Guy, whose parents drove him an hour to the big spelling bee, getting the first word wrong. How do you spell "loser"? S-H-A-M-E.

That's merely one example from my vast portfolio of shameworthy life experiences. At any given moment, I can summon memories of things I said or did decades ago and make myself cringe. When I was in kindergarten, I kicked dirt into Lissa Valestine's ice cream cone while running around playing The Dukes of Hazzard, and she looked really sad about that. That's one of my earliest memories. Imagine all the wonderful experiences that have been forgotten in order to make room in my brain for that. And yet: That was the last time I ever kicked dirt in anyone's ice cream. Shame is useful like that.

Most of the time, when you witness a shameful situation, the perpetrator is too oblivious to recognize the crime. Go to the beach and you'll see what I mean. According to my own beach code of conduct, I can go shirtless or sit down but not both at the same time. Shirtless and sitting is a bad look. That area needs to be stretched out, not folded up. Does this policy mean that I'm body-shaming myself? Then so be it. If I got into better shape, sit-down-with-no-shirt shape, then I wouldn't have anything to worry about. But take a look around any given beach and you'll see that my vanity runs close to the surface compared to the general populace, because clearly most people have not heard of my shirt-or-stand rule. By pointing that out, am I body-shaming a hypothetical beach crowd? And if so, do you think I should feel bad about that? Well then, you're shame-shaming me, and that can't be right either.

Shirtless and sitting is a bad look. That area needs to be stretched out, not folded up.

Look, I don't want you to feel bad about everything you do. Not every busker can be tipped, not every door can be held, not every birthday can be remembered. But everyone should bathe in a sense of disgust and regret every once in a while. It's good for you. Why, I'm ashamed right now. You know all the hurricanes lately? I haven't donated any money. But I'm about to. And then I'll have a few moments of peace before my thoughts return to my unique problems. Unique: two u's. Never spelled it wrong again. ◆

CENTER STAGE

THE VETERAN ACTOR HOLDS COURT ON INDIE ROLES, BLACKLISTING CO-WORKERS AND EXTRA CONSONANTS

ACTOR, SINGER, WRITER, PRODUCER, DIRECTOR AND activist Alan Cumming, 52, brings the international tour of his one-man show, Alan Cumming Sings Sappy Songs, to Harvard's Sanders Theatre on Oct. 6. Born and raised in Scotland, he regularly travels to Boston to tape the intro to PBS's Masterpiece Mystery! and the Tony and Olivier award-winner's recent theater work includes Cabaret on Broadway. His many films include Romy and Michele's High School Reunion, GoldenEye, Eyes Wide Shut, Spy Kids and more recently, Any Day Now, After Louie and Battle of the Sexes. On television, he appeared on seven seasons of The Good Wife, and he is the star of the new CBS series Instinct. His memoir, Not My Father's Son, was a New York Times bestseller, and he is also the author of The Adventures of Honey & Leon, a children's picture book illustrated by his husband, Grant Shaffer.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Do you watch every episode of Masterpiece Mystery!?
ALAN CUMMING: No. I don't have the time.

Mood you most find yourself in? I would say perky.

Thing you most look forward to in coming to Boston? Well, usually when I come, it's to do the Masterpiece thing. I love catching up with the PBS ladies and gents. But I also have a very good friend who decided to give up acting and he's studying law at Harvard, so I love getting to see him. I love going to the A.R.T. It's mostly about the theater and the people at 'GBH, but there's also really fun drag shows.

One skill you wish you had but don't? Being better at answering dopey questions that journalists ask me.

One thing that most people would be surprised to know about you? I'm very good at making food for large amounts of people. I can easily whip up a meal for 20.

Role you were born to play? Myself. I don't really understand it when people say, "Oh, you were born to play that role." I just think that's crazy. It seems to me like a way to explain what people think of you, and I always think it's really different from the way I think of myself.

Painter you'd most like to have depict you? Well, I love David Hockney, and I recently did a thing where I sat in front of a David Hockney picture at the Tate museum in London and read some stuff by Christopher Isherwood. There's just something about Hockney's work. He gets people in a very interesting way.

Anyone you'd never work with again, and why? Oh, lots. There's people who are badly behaved and they don't respect others. I like doing my job, and I want to go to work and have a good time. That's much more important to me than the end product, the film or the play or whatever. So if there's someone who makes going to work unpleasant because of their bad behavior, I won't work with them again. I think an awful lot of bad behavior is tolerated in my business, and I'd like to stamp it out. I always call people on it.

Most physically demanding role? It was definitely something in the theater. I suppose Macbeth. The sheer running around and banging into things.

Role you've played that's most like who you really are? None. I've never played a Scottish-American man in his 50s who lives in New York. No one's ever asked me to.

Do you take high-paying roles in blockbusters to finance the smaller indie roles you really want to do? Yes. I sort of think of it as the Hollywood bank. You make a deposit by doing something lucrative and commercial, and then you're able to withdraw in order to do things that won't be as successful. I mean, I understand that this is a business. There's a film that I made last year that I know me being in it helped that film get made. So you definitely have to go backward and forward.

To what do you attribute the human need for theater or drama? Well, I feel that drama makes sense of real life for us. We use art to kind of explain and expose and eliminate things in our own lives. And that's why I really like doing my job. I think in society, I am a tool to help people understand themselves and be better people.

Fantasy love scene partner? I think it would be a three-way with Tom Hardy and Meryl Streep.

Most dangerous moment you ever had acting? There's lots of moments like that, but I nearly fell off a church steeple doing a film in England years ago.

Favorite film of all time? I think it would have to be Waiting for Guffman. It's so hilarious. I just love it and I know every second of it, but also, it kind of taught me about America. I saw it quite soon after I arrived here, and I thought, "If this is being lampooned, it must be real." It was like an educational film for me. It so beautifully mocks actors and their aspirations, which is always a good thing to do.

Do you like watching yourself? I don't mind. I think you're supposed to watch yourself, because then you're able to see whether or not what you intended to do actually happened. I think actors who don't watch themselves are stupid. But watching a sex scene with your mum, that doesn't get any easier.

Favorite film of your own? That's a hard question, because is it my favorite for how it turned out, or favorite for the experience? If pressed, I guess I'd say Any Day Now, because it's such a beautiful film. So sad. I defy you not to be an absolute bucket of tears at the end of it.

Does New York or Scotland feel more like home to you? Well, I'm always going to be Scottish, and I feel very connected to the soil there. But New York is now definitely my home. I've made my life there. The thing about New York is that it's full of people from different places, and you become a New Yorker to be with all these different people. When you're Scottish, it's a very idiosyncratic thing. So New York is home, but I'm always going to feel Scottish first.

Film, television or stage work? Whichever I'm doing at the time. But if I had a gun to my head, I would choose the theater, because of the connection with the audience.

What do you want written on your tombstone? There's no "S." ◆

"I think an awful lot of bad behavior is tolerated in my business, and I'd like to stamp it out. I always call people on it."

Pass THE Pasta

Breaking down the Italian favorite—one noodle at a time

Flour Arrangements

When chefs Kevin O'Donnell and Michael Lombardi opened Venetian bacaro SRV nearly two years ago, it was the first Boston restaurant to mill its own flour in house. "The most important thing that makes the pasta stand out, for us at least, is the grain," says O'Donnell, who notes SRV's own flour is used in every aspect of cooking, save for dredging, which means the mill's running constantly. Lombardi adds: "Every bread loaf is 100 percent made in house; every piece of pasta is 100 percent made in house." Here, the pair gives us a taste of rolling out the dough in the South End hotspot's basement pasta room. / Sarah Hagman

Eggs get added to a blend of the two flours to make dough, which sits for an hour or two until the liquid's absorbed and the gluten rests. "Every day we probably make 10 pounds," O'Donnell says.

The SRV team grinds Massachusetts-based Four Star Farm's soft wheat grains for this delicate flour that's sifted. "We can mill 50 pounds of flour an hour," Lombardi says. "Sometimes for pasta we want it to be superfine, but maybe for bread we want it to be a little more coarse. We can control that with the two different screens we have, plus the number of times we sift it."

This handmade wooden slab with a carved pattern—called a cavarola board—is used with a dowel to form dough into a tubular-shaped pasta, garganelli, that SRV's currently dressing with 'nduja-carrot sugo and pea green pesto. "You take the square and roll it over this board, and it makes little 'quills'—that's what garganelli means," O'Donnell says.

Durum grains from Hayden Mills in Arizona are ground into an unsifted whole wheat flour that's packed with semolina and bran. "We try to maintain as much of the three different parts of the grain in the final product for fuller flavor," Lombardi says.

With a wooden handle and sharp brass tip, this Italian-made cutting tool has an exaggerated diagonal edge that's used for scoring raviolis. And this corzetti stamp, made by the same artisans, cuts out patterned disks. O'Donnell says: "It's a pasta shape that's from Liguria in the northwest."

Certified Meatball Company's bao balls

Meatball Madness!

Spaghetti and meatballs: Name a more iconic duo. But meatballs can shine in their own right—just ask Boston Nightlife Ventures, the restaurant group behind Certified Meatball Company, which opened this summer. From classic meatballs to turducken versions, guests can have it all at the Southie spot, including make-your-own bao balls trimmed with a handful of sauces. Chief culinary officer Bill Brodsky says the airiness of the bun "allows the texture of the meatball to take center stage." Besides the classic beef and marinara, a few of Brodsky's favorite combos include the spicy Korean pork ball with chili barbecue and Moroccan lamb meatball with spiced herb yogurt—and then there's the daily bao specials, like a recent Greek-inspired keftedes with lime-chili yogurt. Or you can also make your way around town to dive into these three other meatball dishes served sans noodles. / Sarah Hagman

At Pastoral chef/owner Todd Winer tops Neapolitan pizza dough with roasted veal meatballs ($18)—packed with garlic nutmeg and panada—and crushed tomatoes, broccoli rabe, parmesan and fior di latta. The veal meatballs also make their way into a kids' menu sandwich made with puccia, a bread from Taranto, Italy, that's thrown in the kitchen's wood oven and stuffed with sauce and melted mozzarella.

Fenway's hitting the meatball out of the park with a pizza crust cone ($9.75) from the Strega restaurant group. The blend of ground veal, beef and wild mushrooms comes courtesy of restaurateur Nick Varano's mother, meaning once the baseball season comes to an end, you can get Rosetta's meatballs at Nico and Strega Waterfront, where chef Salvatore Firicano serves them with a sprinkle of Parmesan cheese, basil, whipped ricotta and pomodoro sauce ($10).

Chef Tony Susi grew up making meatballs with his mom on Sundays, and now the Capo toque recreates the beef and pork recipe—which she never wrote down!—for Meatball Mondays at the Southie restaurant. They're simmered in tomato sugo for up to three hours before being sandwiched in a slider ($3) on Monday nights, but guests can get a carb-less fill the rest of the week with an order of three ($12).

HOT TIPS

Frank DePasquale owns half a dozen restaurants in the North End as well as a pasta shop, a bakery and an extended-stay residence, and the mogul will soon add another attraction to his portfolio in the newly reopened Assaggio. Starting early next year, guests will be able to crank out housemade pasta during classes running on the second level from Monday to Saturday. Each session will focus on Italian favorites—from gelato to mother sauces and, of course, fresh pasta—and conclude with a multi-course meal and a wine pairing from an expert sommelier. DePasquale already has an acclaimed arsenal of culinary creatives lined up to lead the four-hour classes, including chefs from Positano's renowned Buca di Bacco who will give students a taste of how it's done in Italy. In the meantime, DePasquale dished on a few of his must-do's when making pasta at home. / Cathryn Haight

- Use double-zero flour when making the dough.
- Knead your pasta and roll it out thin. You can cut it by hand and make ribbons using a pizza cutter.
- Use San Marzano tomatoes to make a fresh pomodoro sauce. Don't let them touch a knife; squish them by hand into the pan.
- Scoop a ladle full of the starchy water used when boiling the pasta into the sauce while it cooks.
- Don't run water over fresh pasta when straining it—that takes away all the starch, which is what holds the sauce in the pasta's nooks and crannies.

Shaping Up

There's more pasta shapes than it makes sense to count (we're writers, not mathematicians), but we rounded up nine different noodle shapes that you can try throughout Boston.
/ Julia Aparicio and Cathryn Haight

Giulia's pappardelle

Nebo's tagliatelle

PAPPARDELLE

Giulia's in-house pasta program is extensive, producing as many as eight to 10 different shapes daily. The pappardelle with wild boar ($23) has been on its menu since the restaurant opened in December 2012, and chef/owner Michael Pagliarini has no plans to take it off anytime soon. This noodle is fashioned in the style of Emilia-Romagna—with a dough made from egg yolks, olive oil and a combination of semolina "rimacinata" and double-zero flours—and then topped with black trumpet, juniper and Parmigiano.

BUCATINI

MIDA chef/owner Douglass Williams has a thing for his bucatini all'Amatriciana ($21) thanks to the long noodle shape. "[It's] mostly because of the density and dynamic of its hidden space that runs through the entire noodle," says Williams, who tops the bucatini with San Marzano tomato, guanciale and pecorino. Williams keeps this particular noodle—one of eight that MIDA currently has in rotation—on hand for everything from the Della Casa prix fixe menu to Mangia Pasta Mondays ($35), a weekly event where guests can eat all the housemade pasta, salad and bread their hearts desire.

TAGLIATELLE

It remains all in the family at Nebo, where chefs/owners Carla and Christine Pallotta's 83-year-old mother, Angelina, still comes into the restaurant to teach the new pasta prep makers. She brings her own rolling pin, pasta wheel and ravioli cutter, all of which are more than 120 years old and belonged to her own mother. "We tend to make pasta which our mother made for us while growing up," Carla says. This tagliatelle cappesante ($27), served with light mascarpone cream sauce and seared sea scallops, features lemon pasta that's created by adding juice and zest to the dough before it's rolled out, folded into a cylinder and then cut and tossed to unravel.

FAZZOLETTI

"I get really jazzed up when I talk to the service team about this dish," says Salty Pig chef Michael Bergin about the fazzoletti ($9, small/$16, large) that's served with mushroom broth, cloumage cheese and rye crumbs. "It is so simple but carries so much flavor." That flavor comes from an extensive process used to create the broth, which involves putting the mushrooms through a meat grinder before they're cooked. And the flat pasta shape is important too—Bergin specifically chose it because it nicely adheres to the mushroom broth.

GNOCCHI

While all the pasta at Posto is made in house, its gnocchi ($23) with braised beef short ribs, red wine sauce and Parmesan crema has stood above the rest since its inclusion on the opening menu. "The dumpling-like texture and soft cloud-like consistency make for a perfect dish that will not make you too full, but will only make you wonder if you should ask for another order," says chef Joe Carli, who adds that the consistency is key: With each batch of dough, a few pieces are rolled out and cooked ahead of the rest to make sure the texture is just right.

FUSILLI

For Venezia's fusilli alla vodka ($25), chef Gianni Caruso uses a special machine to spin semolina-based dough into a traditional twisted shape. The corkscrew noodles are then tossed in a rich vodka sauce made from butter, leaks, parsley, cream, tomatoes and smoked salmon and finally finished with a splash of vodka that's cooked off before making its way to guests' tables.

STROZZAPRETI

With two cooks kneading 20 pounds of dough daily, Sportello is no stranger to fresh pasta. For a more rustic feel, its strozzapreti ($27) features hand-rolled pasta and is also served with rabbit legs that are braised for two hours in herbs, butter and white wine. After the meat joins the strozzapreti in a pan with more butter, braising liquid and fresh rosemary, the dish is sprinkled with Picholine olives and shards of Parmigiano-Reggiano.

Posto's gnocchi

CAVATELLI

At Coppa groovy cavatelli is made fresh daily from double-zero semolina flour and water, which makes for a chewy dough that lends well to a stewed, braised dish. Chef/co-owner Jamie Bissonnette starts off the cavatelli con pollo ($15, small/$24, large) with housemade chicken sausage and a sauce that's slowly reduced with ground broccoli, onion, white wine, olive oil and tomato. After two hours, Bissonnette adds the cooked-to-order pasta and finishes the dish with oregano, chili flake, fennel pollen and Parmesan.

FETTUCELLE

La Morra's fettucelle con salsiccia di pollo ($14/$25), featuring a wide noodle three times the thickness of tagliatelle, is made using a simple Piemontese recipe of egg yolks and flour. An electric pasta machine from 1940s Italy lends a hand to the process before the ribbon-shaped pasta is cooked and tossed with chicken sausage, local red Russian kale and walnuts, dressed in a flavorful chicken fat sauce and topped with pecorino.

Sportello's strozzapreti

Scampo's beet pappardelle

SPECIAL INGREDIENTS

These three restaurants take housemade pasta to the next level by throwing nontraditional ingredients into the mix. / Julia Aparicio

The motivation behind Cultivar's tomato leaf bucatini ($16, small/$28, large) with blistered tomatoes, potato crisp and Parmigiano-Reggiano foam was a desire to utilize the entire tomato plant, which is often past its prime at the end of summer. "The tomato plant adds a lovely herbaceous flavor to the pasta," says Cultivar chef/owner Mary Dumont. To create the pasta, the tomato leaf is blanched, pureed and then folded into the dough. Once it's smoothed, the surplus is dehydrated, boosting the bucatini's flavor and color.

Thanks to the beets used to create the dough, Scampo's beet pappardelle ($18, half/$28, full) with blue poppy seeds, white baby beets and black summer truffles not only boasts a robust color, but an earthy, rich flavor. The mixture is made using traditional components such as egg yolks, oil, flour and water, but a special puree—created by roasting the beets with spices until tender—is substituted for some of the water. "There's always challenges when using nontraditional ingredients," says Scampo executive sous-chef Alex Pineda. "But it's about finding the correct balance and method of preparation."

Ledger executive chef Daniel Gursha's mother used to make him multi-colored wagon wheel pasta as a child. His love of the shape and colors she used inspired him to include vegetables in the dough to help add layers of flavor to his pasta dishes. For the lobster spaghetti ($34) with corn pasta, fresh tomato, herbs, butter and chili, the freshest corn possible is used so that the vegetable's sweetness comes through in the noodles.

AN ITALIAN CONNECTION

Pasta and Italy are forever linked—perhaps to the point of an exhausted cliche—but these restaurants give the cuisine a more focused treatment by zeroing in on specific Italian regions for parts of their menus.

Cinquecento
LAZIO

While many of the dishes at Cinquecento are modern interpretations of Italian classics, they're deeply rooted in Lazio tradition. "There is no better place in Italy, or most of Europe, to find diverse and rare food than throughout the Lazio region, and for Cinquecento, most importantly in Rome," says Aquitaine Group founder Seth Woods. Cinquecento's menu currently offers three dishes that reflect the Lazio region, specifically Rome: saltimbocca, bucatini alla carbonara and carciofi alla giudia.

Erbaluce
PIEDMONT

As a kid, Erbaluce chef/owner Charles Draghi spent two months every summer visiting his relatives in Salogni, a town located in the region of Piedmont. "It was the best time of my life," Draghi says. "The food was simple but so fantastic." While Draghi recreates some Piemontese favorites such as a rabbit ragu and minestrone-like soup at his Bay Village eatery, a basic lesson from his Italian aunts dictates his kitchen's ingredients. "They would take the butter they made to another village. They would call it city food," he says. Decades later and an ocean away, Draghi never uses butter at Erbaluce.

Prezza
ABRUZZO

East of Rome, the Abruzzo region's varied geography lends to diverse cuisine, but Prezza nods to the mountainous area by featuring polenta. Chef Anthony Caturano recalls a childhood filled with "polenta parties," where the porridge was stirred for hours before being poured onto a wooden board in the center of the table. Get in on the celebration with the North End spot's spicy mussels and crispy zucchini flowers.

Bar Mezzana
LIGURIA

With a close proximity to the Mediterranean and a rich, centuries-old fishing culture, Ligurian cuisine often utilizes high-quality yet simple ingredients as the main component of a dish. That signature method is on display at Bar Mezzana, which turns out housemade focaccia, ravioli Genovese and trofie pasta Genovese. "Liguria embodies what we try to accomplish in cooking," says executive chef/partner Colin Lynch. "Take a simple ingredient and try not to mess it up too much."

The Daily Catch SICILY

The cuisine at the Daily Catch's three locations reflects the valleys of Sicily that Paul Freddura's parents emigrated from in the early 20th century. With fishing a major industry in Sicily, many of Daily Catch's dishes include fresh seafood with simple ingredients such as olive oil, lemon, garlic and vinegars. And the black pasta that's popular in Sicily also gets plenty of use at the Daily Catch, with an entire section devoted to housemade linguine made with squid ink and prepared in a variety of ways.

A Chocolate Twist

Pasta might soon become an anytime-of-day dish. You can now get a sweet start to the day at Viale, where a new pasta-filled brunch menu includes a chocolate fettuccine ($12) that's bathed in a peanut butter cream and topped with chocolate chips, coconut flakes and brown-buttered puffed rice for a bit of crunch. "The dish is kind of like a candy bar in flavor," explains executive chef and co-owner Greg Reeves, who says he took a cue from other sugary breakfast faves like pancakes, French toast and waffles. "We like the idea of pasta for breakfast. It has a lot of the same elements of a basic egg breakfast but is executed in a different way." / Soroh Hagmon

SO SAUCY!

Every chef has a personal Bolognese recipe and chef Tony DiCenso of Rino's Place is no different. He's been whipping up this sauce since culinary school, and he cooks a fresh batch every morning to serve at the East Boston standby. DiCenso shared his recipe and his preference to use it with rigatoni: "The meat sauce finds its way into the tubes and it gives you a nice bite." / Matt Martinelli

BOLOGNESE SAUCE

Serves 4 people

- 1 pound ground veal
- 1 pound ground beef
- 1 pound ground pork
- ½ cup extra-virgin olive oil
- 2 heads garlic, minced
- ½ cup carrots, diced
- ½ cup onions, diced
- ½ cup celery, diced
- 1 bay leaf
- Pepper to taste
- Rosemary to taste
- Sage to taste
- Salt to taste
- 1 cup red wine
- 3 cups tomato sauce

Add the olive oil and garlic to a pot with the veal, beef and pork and cook over high heat until the meat is browned. Add the carrots, onions, celery, bay leaf, pepper, rosemary, sage, salt and wine and boil over high heat until the wine is reduced. Add enough tomato sauce to cover the mixture (about 3 cups) and cook over medium heat until simmering. Serve over your choice of pasta

CHEESE, PLEASE

Do you always get stuck at the cheese store trying to slice and dice your way through the pros and cons of Parmigiano-Reggiano and pecorino Romano? Or are you a staunch advocate of one variety, huddled in your own cheese corner unwilling to try the other on your handmade pasta? We understand. That's why we tapped David Robinson, the cheese buyer at Formaggio for seven years, for some deets on picking the right cheese for your pasta. For the record, he's not picking sides: "That's like choosing your favorite child." / Matt Martinelli

PARMIGIANO-REGGIANO

Flavor Profile
The cow's milk cheese has a salty hazelnut flavor with hints of dried fruits.

Signs of Quality
"I look for texture: Is it creamier or does it crumble too easily? Is the salt balanced and what will it taste like when we crack that second wheel open in a few weeks?"

Ideal Pasta Pairing
Northern Italian dishes

Ideal Sauce Pairing
Butter sauces, pesto and Bolognese

PECORINO ROMANO

Flavor Profile
The sheep's milk cheese is richer and saltier, and the taste is a touch animally.

Signs of Quality
"It's similar [to Parmigiano-Reggiano] but I also look at color. The more off-white it is, the older it is and the quicker it needs to be moved. It also gets stronger than I want at that point."

Ideal Pasta Pairing
Southern Italian dishes

Ideal Sauce Pairing
Cacio e pepe, Amatriciana and carbonara

WHITE TABLECLOTHS AREN'T GOING AWAY SOON.

BY SCOTT KEARNAN

Ten thousand dollars is a pretty hefty restaurant bill.

In this case, though, the tab won't be delivered to a black card-dropping guest with very expensive taste in wine. It will be going to chef Marisa Iocco, new co-owner of Spiga, an Italian restaurant she's reopening in Needham this fall after a head-to-toe revamp. Iocco is planning to drape Spiga with classic white tablecloths or table runners during dinner, and she's estimated that full linen service for the 95-seat restaurant could run about five figures annually.

That's a whole lot of Chianti.

"A bare table is like being naked," Iocco says. "The white tablecloth is like dressing in an Armani suit."

On a personal level, Italian-born Iocco actually prefers her tables au naturel. But she knows that for many Americans, there's a symbolic significance to the white tablecloth format: It sets a tone and suggests certain expectations. For what she wants to accomplish, she says it's worth the cost.

She's not alone in feeling that way. Yes, white tablecloths have disappeared from many dining rooms in recent years, alongside other classic hallmarks of fine dining (au revoir, maître d's). As a new generation of tatted, telegenic chefs and TV personalities—even those at the top of their culinary craft—have traded crisp linens for exposed tables handcrafted from reclaimed Vermont barn wood, younger diners have slapped the white tablecloth with a stodgy reputation and tossed it to the wayside.

But Iocco is among several restaurateurs who have revived the white linen look for their latest ventures, joining stalwart institutions that refuse to waver in the face of an anti-tablecloth trend. While this may not signal a reversal of turned tides, these new restaurants certainly offer a renewed argument for celebrating some of the symbolic and practical benefits of the old-school table setting—even as they help court newer crowds with complementary casual, mediating touches.

"Somewhere along the way, the white tablecloth became a sacrificial lamb to democratize dining," says chef Michael Pagliarini. "It wasn't about the tablecloth itself. It was a symbolic thing. It was about getting rid of the baggage that went with it: the associations with stuffiness and pretension."

"But the white tablecloth can really be a wonderful aesthetic touch," he says. "It's a consideration as important as fresh flowers, that gets back to how we experience food alongside design."

You won't find white tablecloths at Pagliarini's beloved first restaurant Giulia, but you will at Benedetto, the new Italian destination he opened in Harvard Square's Charles Hotel in November. Different concepts beget different crowds: Giulia tends to lure neighborhood types and in-the-know foodies, while Benedetto serves a captive audience of international high-end hotel guests and Ivy League-level power brokers from political, academic and artistic communities. Benedetto's rustic-chic design was inspired by Umbrian farmhouses, and while Pagliarini kept wood tables bare in the front lounge, he wanted the main dining room to benefit from the sumptuous, tactile tone-setting of the linens.

"When you run your fingers across the tablecloth, there's the feeling that something has been pressed and set just for you," he says. "There are enough places out there that are full of energy with loud music, dim lights and hard surfaces. I liked the idea of having an adult dining room where you can really enjoy a conversation."

In fact, with noise levels being one of the more common complaints from diners, improved acoustics are one of the major practical reasons for taking the white tablecloth route, says Ian Calhoun, owner of Mooncusser Fish House. The seafood-focused restaurant opened in Back Bay in July, and a more casual, lower-level space, dubbed Moon Bar and designed with lunch crowds and after-work wine sippers in mind, followed in August. But Mooncusser's main third-floor dining room feels more intimate and formal. Calhoun wanted to keep the design simple and free of distractions so that guests can focus attention on the most important things: one another, and the food.

White tablecloths, he says, help absorb the sound of clinking and clanging. And they also offer a "blank canvas" that lets the presentation of a plate, and the work of a highly visual chef, really shine.

"We wanted to pull the focus inward," Calhoun says. Overhead lighting that individually illuminates each table helps too. "When you have some really cool table made of reclaimed wood, that's already interesting in itself. You add a lot of noise, a lot of wall decor, and it adds up to a lot of intrigue."

Hence why the white tablecloth, like any staple piece, won't go out of fashion. "There are ebbs and flows," Calhoun says. "But I don't think it ever goes away." Maybe not, but there's increased emphasis on the ebbs. In recent years, restaurants' white linen use has been "flat or slightly down" says Frank Gianci, owner of Metropolitan Linen, which processes about 250,000 pounds of laundry each week for around 800 restaurant customers in five states, about 37 percent of whom use some kind of tablecloth—mostly white. He's noticed that new restaurants are trending downscale, eschewing classic options for more casual variations like bistro napkins with a stripe of bold color.

> "Somewhere along the way, the white tablecloth became a sacrificial lamb to democratize dining."

LES SABLONS

"You're seeing newer restaurants stay away from traditional white," Gianci says. "But if you're a steakhouse, a higher-end French restaurant or somewhere where you're paying a hundred dollars a head, I still don't think you can get away with that."

He likely wouldn't want them to. The linen business isn't exactly a bad one: Gianci estimates that linen service usually accounts for between 1 and 2 percent of a restaurant's annual costs. That sounds about right to Mark D'Alessandro, general manager of Mistral, the flagship of the fine dining-oriented Columbus Hospitality Group that also counts Ostra and Sorellina among its tablecloth-clad restaurants. D'Alessandro figures that linen service accounts for about 1.5 percent of operating expenses for the restaurant. It's worth it, he says. Though the restaurant group is preparing to open a new casual bistro, Bar Lyon, it's still committed to the white tablecloth format at its first baby.

"A few years ago, after seeing that a lot of finer restaurants were moving away from white tablecloths, we considered removing them here," D'Alessandro says. "We decided against it. It would have completely changed the look, the feel and the concept we're trying to accomplish."

Comfort is the main reason why Chris Campbell, owner of Troquet on South, never considered dropping the white tablecloth format of the original Troquet, long lauded for its extensive fine wine list, when he opened the Leather District spinoff of the similarly named, now-shuttered restaurant that once bordered Boston Common. "When a new restaurant opens, our regular customers go out to try it. But they keep coming back to us," Campbell says. "With new places opening all the time, there's something to be said for maintaining consistency."

The new location does boast a bigger bar area with linen-free seating, something that feels more accessible and inviting to younger crowds—and makes sense, given the relative cost. "Our table linens can cost from six to nine dollars to get serviced," Campbell estimates. "If someone wants to sit in the dining room for a burger and a glass of water, we're paying more than it's worth."

Though it's often assumed that the traditional trappings of fine dining are only of interest to older diners, some restaurateurs resuscitating white tablecloths actually think the format—and the added air of sophistication it connotes—can feel exciting to guests for whom the classic approach is, ironically, less familiar.

That's the case in the eyes of restaurateur Garrett Harker, whose latest venture, the Continental cuisine-focused Les Sablons, rolled out the white linens when it opened in Harvard Square in April. Harker says the sense of "weight" of the historic location—Les Sablons is housed within Cambridge's big, brick Conductor's Building, an administrative headquarters for the former elevated railway—dictated the look and feel of the bi-level interior. The downstairs feels like a sleek cocktail spot, a bit swankier than its sibling Island Creek Oyster Bar. The upstairs is unmistakably high-end, Manhattan-chic with a bit of playfulness, including a black-and-white photo of a smoldering David Bowie framed by Play-Doh tubs. It's white tablecloth dining that won't put off those raised on the rock-star chef scene.

"We tried to find a certain balance," Harker says. "We had to balance a little nostalgia, a little bit of why we fell in love with this industry and a little bit of our core clientele, with thinking a lot about the next generation. There's an opportunity with millennials who are embarking on their careers and haven't had a lot of experience or exposure to these restaurants."

And whatever the ups and downs, the white tablecloth is ultimately not going away completely. After all, where some see formality, others just see comfort and familiarity.

"We never considered taking away the white tablecloth," says Chris Glionna, director of operations for the upscale Aquitaine Group. The team's eponymous flagship reopened last year after a modernizing makeover, but the tablecloths remained. In fact, the group also added white linens to the Lynnfield location of its Gaslight brasseries, finding that the look was preferred even in the more casual—per conventional wisdom, anyway—suburbs. Glionna says that less formal aesthetic touches, like Aquitaine-branded dinner plates, and friendly service mediate any stuffy associations with the look.

"I think there's a level of familiarity that's especially important to people right now in uncertain times," Glionna says. "They want to eat food that is comforting in a space that brings back great memories."

THE INVENTIVE LAYOUT promises to match the ideas at this year's HUBweek. Billed as a festival that explores how art, science and tech intersect in the future, the event was previously scattered across the city. This year, it finds more centralized digs with most of the events during the final four days of the six-day festival at the Hub on City Hall Plaza, spread throughout 80 shipping containers and six colorful geodesic domes housing performances, installations, parties and many other events. The festival's three-night Immersion experience includes a silent disco that matches the color of dancers' headphones to the beats from one of three DJs as well as a showcase of short films meant to be played in a fulldome experience. PERFORMING ARTS

TOTES BOATS There are no men and there are no boats on stage for SpeakEasy Stage Company's Men on Boats, and that's entirely the point of Jaclyn Backhaus' subversive play. Based on geologist John Wesley Powell's journals chronicling his 1869 expedition along the Colorado River, the play comments on historical memory and replaces the male explorers with a gender-bending east. Along the way, the ensemble encounters Native Americans, faces off with a snake and deals with choppy waters. Drop anchor and head to the BCA's Calderwood Pavilion through Oct. 7. / Matt Martinelli

MAN ON STAGE

With the strength of a linebacker and elegance of, well, a ballerina, Marcelo Gomes is one of the most sought-after pas de deux partners today. Anatomy of a Male Ballet Dancer follows the longtime principal dancer as he jetés across four continents and multiple cities, including his onetime home of Rio de Janeiro. The film toes the line between the glamour of Gomes' life onstage and the pain that awaits him as he steps off: an estranged father, multiple injuries and the ever-present ticking clock, as this year marks his impressive 20th anniversary with American Ballet Theatre. It's curtain up when the documentary chassés into the Brattle Theatre on Oct. 14. / Brenna Donovan

Reviews by Brett Michel

American Assassin ★1/2 Late author Vince Flynn's fictional counter-terrorism operative Mitch Rapp finally makes it to the big screen in director Michael Cuesta's attempt to kick-start an action franchise, but the CIA Black Ops recruit barely makes it out of training because of a misguided, overreaching script that's clearly had too many hands on it. A very loose adaptation of one of the final of 16 novels featuring Rapp, the character was originally intended to be in his mid-40s. But since the plot has been reconfigured as an origin story, The Maze Runner's Dylan O'Brien has slipped into the shoes of the now 20-something young hotshot, and Rapp's biographical details have been updated as well. The death of his girlfriend still gets the ball rolling, but high school sweetheart Maureen has transformed into Katrina (newcomer Charlotte Vega), and rather than a fictional victim of the real-life bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 in 1988, this movie's updated timeline finds her being gunned down in front of Rapp—just minutes after becoming his fiancee—during the gratuitous beach resort terrorist attack that opens the film. O'Brien makes little impact as the loose cannon, while Michael Keaton injects a welcome touch of class to the low-rent proceedings as Stan Hurley, Rapp's trainer and mentor. Adding to the budget-rate feel are some awful computer-generated effects that overtake the big-action climax at sea, most of which would even look out-of-place in one of today's hyper-realistic video games. It's an anonymously executed misfire. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Battle of the Sexes ★★★ Bless those in Hollywood who are dodging the digital revolution and opting to shoot their movies on celluloid. In the case of married filmmakers Jonathan Dayton and Valerie Faris (co-directors of 2006's Little Miss Sunshine and 2012's Ruby Sparks), their use of 35mm and 16mm film stocks to capture the 1973 setting of their latest project lends the comedic drama an air of authenticity that's missing from recent period pictures. But it's not simply the naturalistic lighting and '70s-styled framing courtesy of Linus Sandgren, the Oscar-winning cinematographer of last year's La La Land. It's also the costuming, hairstyling and production design that help make Battle of the Sexes feel like it could have actually been produced in 1973. And in commanding star turns, Emma Stone (another Oscar winner for La La Land) and Steve Carell (an Oscar nominee for 2014's Foxcatcher) do a tremendous job of inhabiting the skins of tennis players Billie Jean King and Bobby Riggs. Despite the film's appeal as an old-fashioned crowd-pleaser, the script by Simon Beaufoy (Oscar-winning writer of 2008's Slumdog Millionaire) makes the widely televised showdown between the 29-year-old female champ and the 55-year-old serial hustler and self-professed male chauvinist feel amazingly contemporary in the age of Trump. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Brad's Status ★★★1/2 In 2013, Ben Stiller directed and starred in an adaptation of James Thurber's short story, The Secret Life of Walter Mitty, and the film almost completely missed the mark of the American humorist's most famous tale. That flop veered away from Thurber's vivid text, which originally appeared in the pages of The New Yorker in 1939 and dealt with a hapless daydreamer and his imagined flights of fancy. Leave it to writer/director Mike White—the talented screenwriter of 2003's School of Rock—to direct Stiller in the Mitty movie that should have been made. Stiller plays Brad Sloan, a 47-year-old who experiences a mild midlife crisis while accompanying his disaffected son Troy (Austin Abrams) to scout colleges in Boston. The nonprofit owner spends most of the trip mentally comparing himself to his old college buddies (Michael Sheen, Luke Wilson, Jemaine Clement and White), daydreaming about how much better his life might be in their shoes. Having already penned director Miguel Arteta's Beatriz at Dinner, White is enjoying one hell of a year. In the director's chair for the second time in his film career, he shows a much steadier hand with this archly comedic drama than he did with 2007's Year of the Dog, pulling a remarkably restrained performance out of Stiller. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Hitman's Bodyguard ★★1/2 Perhaps you're too young to remember 1988's Midnight Run, or you'd rather just see an inferior version starring Ryan Reynolds and Samuel L. Jackson standing in for the Robert De Niro and Charles Grodin archetypes? Sure, this is the kind of movie that would endlessly entertain less-discerning viewers on Netflix, but audiences have nevertheless turned this fluffy action comedy into a late-summer hit at the multiplex. And while there are certainly smarter options currently in theaters, this amiable time-waster from director Patrick Hughes (the auteur behind The Expendables 3)—involving relentless, buttoned-up bodyguard Michael Bryce (Reynolds) and his mortal enemy, Darius Kincaid (Jackson), the notorious hit man he's been tasked with protecting—still has its dumb charms. One is the foul-mouthed performance by Salma Hayek, who matches Jackson, F-bomb for F-bomb, as Darius' wife Sonia. She's been captured by Interpol agent Amelia Roussel (Elodie Yung), who just happens to be Michael's ex. In order to free her, Darius will have to accompany Michael as they outrun assassination attempts from England to the Hague, where he's scheduled to testify against Vladislav Dukhovich (Gary Oldman), the fictional dictator of Belarus. Sound convoluted? It is. But Hughes and writer Tom

O'Connor keep things moving at a fast enough clip that you probably won't care until things bog down when the hit man and his bodyguard begin to respect each other. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Home Again ★★ It's not surprising that the 30-year-old daughter of divorced Oscar-nominated writers/directors Nancy Meyers (Something's Gotta Give, It's Complicated) and Charles Shyer (Baby Boom, Father of the Bride) would make her own writing and directing debut with a little help from mom and dad. Even less surprising is how culturally insulated and tone-deaf the dilemmas faced by the film's protagonists are. Hallie Meyers-Shyer has presumably written what she knows with Home Again, though a better title for this fantasy might be White Privilege. Her protagonist, recently separated Alice Kinney (Oscar-winner Reese Witherspoon) has just inherited a large bungalow from her late, Oscar-winning filmmaker father. Her mother, a beloved former actress named Lillian Stewart (Candice Bergen), convinces Alice to allow the three recent film school graduates who crashed the night before—Teddy (Nat Wolff), George (Jon Rudnitsky) and Harry (Pico Alexander)—to temporarily move into the adjacent guest house, rent-free. And why not, when these three absolute strangers who Alice met while celebrating her 40th birthday at a bar can help with her two young daughters, Isabel (Lola Flanery) and Rosie (Eden Grace Redfield) when they're not cooking dinner, building a website for her interior design business she started on a whim or becoming her sexual boy-toy? Oddly, much of this plays better than it should, if you have a taste for formula that's been served up with a silver spoon. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

It ★★1/2 The biggest surprise from Mama director Andy Muschietti's serviceable film adaptation of Stephen King's novel It is that it's become such a massive hit. Here's a sprawling story that's already been adapted to another medium (the 1990 TV miniseries starring Tim Curry as Pennywise the Dancing Clown), along with countless cloncs and imitators over the years, including last year's Netflix success story, Stranger Things, which counts this new version of It's Finn Wolfhard among its series cast. Here, Wolfhard plays Richie Tozicr, the motormouthed comic relief of the Loscrs Club, a band of middle-school kids that King devotes half of his book to (the other half of his tome focuses on these children as adults) and are brought to life in Muschietti's movie by a talented group of mostly newcomers, including Sophia Lillis as the Losers' lone girl, Bev Marsh. The Book of Henry's Jaeden Lieberher brings some haunted soul to his role as stutterer Bill Denbrough, whose little brother Georgie (Jackson Robert Scott) is brutally devoured by the lagomorphic-looking Pcnnywise (Stellan Skarsgård's son and Alexandcr's brother, Bill). That's the opening scene of thc film and it provides the only real chills the film has to offer. What we're left with is a group of good kids in a decent coming-of-age tale that could havc been much more. But, as the closing credits threatcn, this is just "Chapter One" of a two-part whole—and if Amy Adams doesn't show up as an older Bcv, let's all demand a refund! (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somcrville and in the suburbs.)

Mother! ★★1/2 Give Darren Aronofsky this much: The filmmaker is fully committed to his vision. As such, I've little doubt that evcrything contained onscreen (and blasting out of the theater speakers) in Mother!, the writer/director's love-it-or-hate-it latest, is presented exactly the way he intended, whether viewers' interpretations align with his motives or not. This critic's in the minority, falling somewhere in the middle of the visceral reactions to Aronofsky's wildly confused allegory. There's no doubt that Aronofsky believes he's created an intellectual work of art. The fact that his film (and it is a film in the classic sense, beautifully captured on 16mm stock by Matthew Libatique, who's expertly lensed all but one of Aronofsky's seven features) has sparked such passionate debate among both admirers and detractors indicates it's already accomplished what few pieces of art do. But it's the intellectual angle where he comes up woefully empty: You won't find much complexity or nuance. As far as that allegory, it's alternately Biblical or metaphorical, involving Mother Earth (as represented by a scantily-clad Jennifer Lawrence, who wins the good sport award for agreeing to be turned into a doormat by her director/new boyfriend before being beaten to a pulp) and her narcissistic, struggling artist husband/God/director substitute (Javier Bardem), with a little Adam, Eve, Cain, Abel and the body of Christ mixed in. Sure, why not? As an artist, Aronofsky's about as subtle as Gallagher let loose with a sledgehammer—only you're the watermelon. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Stronger ★★★1/2 Last Christmas, in his grossly exploitative vanity project Patriots Day, Dorchester-born actor/producer Mark Wahlberg cast himself as the hero of 2013's horrific Boston Marathon bombing. Wahlberg's completely fictional Sgt. Tommy Saunders was present for every big moment—from witnessing the blasts at the finish line to discovering Dzhokhar Tsarnaev hiding inside a boat in a Watertown backyard. Hell, even David Ortiz stopped to shake Wahlberg's hand at Fenway Park just before the slugger delivered his iconic "This is our fucking city" speech. It is our fucking city, and we deserved a hell of a lot better than Wahlberg's tasteless cash-in on a tragedy. And now we have it. Director David Gordon Green's Stronger, which has been adapted from bombing survivor Jeff Bauman's memoir, could have easily become a hagiography. However, John Pollono's intimate, character-driven script wisely presents Bauman (Jake Gyllenhaal) as a deeply flawed young man who's wildly uncomfortable with the heroic spotlight that's been shone on him by the media and public. And unlike Patriots Day, Stronger doesn't focus on the bombing. Rather, it's the random event that sets the man-child on a journey toward recovery: Gradually learning to walk on artificial limbs after losing both legs, he also takes his first steps toward growing up—and Gyllenhaal's tremendous performance allows you to follow along during each pivotal step. And as strong as Gyllenhaal's work is, the acting by Orphan Black star Tatiana Maslany as Bauman's on-again, off-again girlfriend Erin is, well, stronger. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Victoria & Abdul ★★1/2 Dame Judi Dench is poised to do what few Oscar-nominated actors have done before, standing to be nominated for playing the same character twice, while joining a select group that includes Cate Blanchett, Bing Crosby, Paul Newman, Peter O'Toole, Al Pacino and Sylvester Stallone. In the latest historical drama from Stephen Frears (director of 2006's The Queen, 2013's Philomena and last year's Florence Foster Jenkins), Dench dons the starchy dresses of Queen Victoria, 20 years after playing the role in director John Madden's Mrs. Brown. The 1997 dramatization centers on the Queen's relationship with John Brown, a Scottish member of her household staff who offered comfort after the death of her husband with a forbidden friendship that threatened to create a scandal in the tight-knit monarchy. Looked at from a certain angle, Frears' Victoria & Abdul is sort of a genteel sequel to—if not an outright remake of—Madden's arthouse hit, with its little-known story of the close bond the older Queen formed with Abdul Karim (Furious 7's Ali Fazal), a young Indian servant chosen to deliver a coin to her from overseas, in a film that begins as farce before detouring into tragedy. It's all very familiar, and like the current royal family, it doesn't have a strong purpose—outside of the typically award-worthy work that Dench commits to the screen. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

BEING HUMAN For their sophomore album How to Be a Human Being, indie rockers Glass Animals synthesize the stories of people that frontman Dave Bayley talked to (and secretly recorded) while on tour. Each song is shaped around a different eccentric character inspired by those real-life interactions, forming a rhythmic human portfolio. The British band, while staying true to their strange and eclectic sound, takes on a raw realism in this pulsing concept album. Get a taste of "Life Itself" (and the 10 other grooving tracks) when this four-piece outfit takes the stage at Agganis Arena on Oct. 7. / Hannah McKennett

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

FIELD GOALS It's not quite February yet, but the Vince Lombardi Trophy is making another appearance in Boston on Oct. 8, when Gridiron Glory touches down at the Museum of Science. The Pro Football Hall of Fame brings more than 200 photographs, artifacts and archival footage from its headquarters in Canton, Ohio. Hop into an instant replay booth or check out the accounting ledger from an 1892 game that marked the sport's first pro player. And New England fans get up close with cleats, gloves and jerseys worn during milestone games, plus 1980s AstroTurf from Foxboro Stadium's predecessor, and even the draft card for 2000's 199th pick, Tom Brady. Rush to the Museum of Science through Jan. 7. / Sarah Hagman

KISS AND TELL

The unofficial end-of-summer/back-to-school social event of the year, From Fenway to the Runway, took place in the swanky ballroom of Hotel Commonwealth and featured a fashion show with Red Sox wives modeling the latest from Bloomingdale's to raise money for the Red Sox Foundation.

The Improper was proud to sponsor the event, which was like the cool kids gathering in the cafeteria, except that alcohol was served. Over bubbles and rosé, there was lots of catch-up kibitzing among a crew still sun-kissed from Nantucket/Martha's Vineyard/Cape Cod/Wherever. Front and center: first lady of Red Sox Nation Linda Pizzuti Henry, her smashing sisters, Laura Pizzuti-Gamache, Donna Pizzuti Brodigan and Tina Pizzuti-Brzezenski, their uber-fabulous mom, Marie, the always sparkling Ashley Renzi, broadcasting babe Sue Brady Hartigan, the pert and purdy Emily Kaplan, raven-haired beauty Wendy Dodson, the magnificent Margaret McNeill, costume queen Lynne Smith, teal-eyed stunner Julie Gordon, bubbly fashion plate Tonya Chen Mezrich, the flawless Elena Matlack, event czar Bryan Rafanelli, the beyond gorgeous Adele Chang, Beacon Hill yummy mummy Liz Georgantas, English rose Emma-Louise Pickard, blond Bond girl Ashley Bernon, glowing newlywed Nina Jung Gasparrini, Bloomie's grand pooh-bah Matt "I Sell Dresses at the Mall" Dunphy, the comme il faut Patty Ribakoff, Chestnut Hillion Nancy Adams, media maven Julie Kahn and so on and so forth.

Not surprisingly, when it came to outfits, red was the new black, although black featured prominently in the fashion show, with one dress prompting a guest to mutter, "It's a little too Morticia Addams for my taste."

Meanwhile, another guest took some gentle ribbing for having a nanny for his dog, while someone else said, "My Spanx are cutting off all sensation below the waist."

However, the afternoon's best exchange came when a woman said, "Last night, I kissed a guy whose last name I don't know," to which her friend responded, "Oh, please. I've slept with guys whose first names I never bothered to find out."

IT'S THE END OF THE WORLD AS WE KNOW IT

It's impossible to imagine a more magnificent setting, and when you throw in sumptuous outdoor decor, superb food and drink and a sunset straight out of a Maxfield Parrish painting, it's no wonder that the 50th anniversary celebration for World's End in Hingham, hosted by the Trustees, was such an enchanted evening.

The knoll looking back at the Boston skyline was decorated with lanterns, fairy lights and sailcloth strung between the trees, and a bluegrass band did respectable covers of pop songs, while everyone milled about, marveling at the scene.

Prominent among the throng: honoree Tom O'Donnell, co-chairs Debbie and Phil Edmundson and Martha and Michael Gangemi, trustee and uber-preservationist Lillie Johnson and her gorgeous daughter Beth, the criminally good-looking Jeff and Nicole Bellows, banking bigwig Christopher Oddleifson of Rockland Trust, South Shore Conservatory head honcha Kathy Czerny, investment gurus Peter Coffin and Ted Ladd, Sam Wakeman Jr. (whose father led the campaign to preserve the property) with his sisters Judy Ferenbach and Susan Davis, hale and hearty real estate developer Marc Beaulieu, and one joker who boarded the shuttle bus that brought guests from the parking lot to the party and said to the driver, "57th and Lexington, please."

Dinner was delicious, and guests enjoyed a fireworks display over the Boston skyline during the speaking portion, while anyone who stayed late enough was treated to a jaw-dropping moonrise.

"How many people do you think have lost their virginity here?" one guest wondered aloud.

But the evening's funniest remark was:

"Do you hunt?"

"Only for my car keys." ◆

TAKING THE CAKE

YOU'RE EITHER A FROSTING PERSON, or you're not. I am a frosting person. I seek out the corner slice of a sheet cake like a Kardashian scours an NBA roster. Mathematically speaking, there's nearly three times the amount of frosting on a corner slice. If you like frosting, you'd be a fool not to hunt for it. And yet, even I see the appeal of a somewhat naked cake similar to the one on the cover from Jenny's Wedding Cakes. Perhaps it's the absence of frosting that makes my mouth water even more for any hint of the sugary stuff. As Carley D. Thornell explores in the cover story for our Wedding issue, it's not just these cakes that are in style. Couples are opting for simpler weddings, and there are lots of different ways to go for a more timeless look on your big day.

Elsewhere in the issue, we check in with local bridal designers on industry trends and memorable commissions, while Nathan Tavares sizes up Mr. Sid. The fashion cornerstone for a half-century in its Newton location, the iconic men's shop is now expanding to the Seaport. And if you think planning a wedding requires an Olympic effort, try hearing from an actual Olympian. Our Jonathan Soroff talks to silver-medalist Gevvie Stone, who's aiming to make history later this month at the Head of the Charles as she goes for her eighth championship singles victory. The secret to the Newton native's success might just be the ice cream she eats every night before a race. It sounds like it would go great with cake.

MR. SID CELEBRATES 50 YEARS OF STYLE AND A NEW STORE

Suited for Success

For luxury men's retailer Mr. Sid, the Seaport feels like a tailor-made fit. Stuart and Barry Segel, brothers and co-owners of the Newton-based family venture, are opening a second menswear shop in One Seaport Square by early next month, right on the heels of the institution's 50th anniversary. "We're very proud that we've sustained a three-generation family business for 50 years," Stuart says. Though the pieces they sell—crisp shirts by favorite designers, bespoke suits, heirloom-worthy leather shoes—are an undeniable draw, the brothers credit their success to their ties to the community. "It comes down to relationships with your clients and friends," Barry says. "Ultimately, they become part of the fabric of your business."

The duo was drawn to the energy of the Seaport and neighboring Fort Point, and the 2,200-square-foot spot is a reflection of both the surrounding modern glass and chrome structures and historic brick wharf buildings, blending handsome woodwork with modern, clean lines. The layout is a kind of optical illusion, with a series of wood-framed doorways leading to room vignettes, including a bar in the back where shoppers can grab a bourbon before they browse. Boasting the same offerings as the Newton flagship, the store includes a tailor shop, made-to-measure services and a trove of swatches for shirts, suits and sportswear. With Seaport Barbers adjoining the space, it's easy to imagine a scruffy, style-challenged customer stumbling in, and then hitting the sidewalk with his new Italian leather shoes and fresh fade.

Even with five decades on the books, there's the new thrill of discovering who the Seaport customer is. "You have the millennials here, but you also have the guys who work at places like Vertex and are more established, who might live in the suburbs," Barry says. The key is to offer items that resonate more with the city guy, along with timeless mainstays. But Stuart has spotted a shift in menswear during the past six or seven years: "You see that a lot of the more traditional businesses like banking and private equity have gone to business casual." Which is not to say that customers are getting lazy in their threads, but that they're on the lookout for quality—like custom-made options cut from luxe fabrics—when it's time to suit up. / Nathan Tavares

A CANAL STREET CONCEPT DEPARTS FROM THE NORM

BODEGA CANAL
bodegacanal.com

Nick Frattaroli, owner of Ward 8 and North Square Oyster, is no stranger to going against the grain. In the shadow of the Italian food-centric North End, Frattaroli saw an opportunity to offer something different with the American fare and craft cocktails served at gastropub Ward 8. Now, Frattaroli is shaking things up again with his Mexican-themed "rustic luxe" concept Bodega Canal, set to open in the sports bar-laden West End in November.

"Sports are a big part of the area, but we want to be a restaurant, not just a place where people go before games," Frattaroli says. "We're excited to do something different near the Garden, give the neighborhood another option."

With distressed walls, sparkling chandeliers and gothic candelabras dripping in candle wax, the atmosphere at Bodega Canal stands apart from the vibrant colors and festive decorations often associated with Mexican spots.

"What we wanted to do was not go the traditional Mexican restaurant route," designer Justin Power says. "We wanted to be a little more understated but elevated at the same time."

This philosophy carried over to the kitchen as well, where chef Kenny Schweizer will create a variety of Mexican-inspired staples with inventive twists, including buttered lobster tacos served with grilled corn, pico de gallo, cojita and ancho crema on homemade corn tortillas. The drink menu also showcases a combination of traditional favorites alongside creative newcomers, such as the Mamacita cocktail made with Olmeca Altos Reposado, lime, cinnamon bitters and Goya pineapple soda.

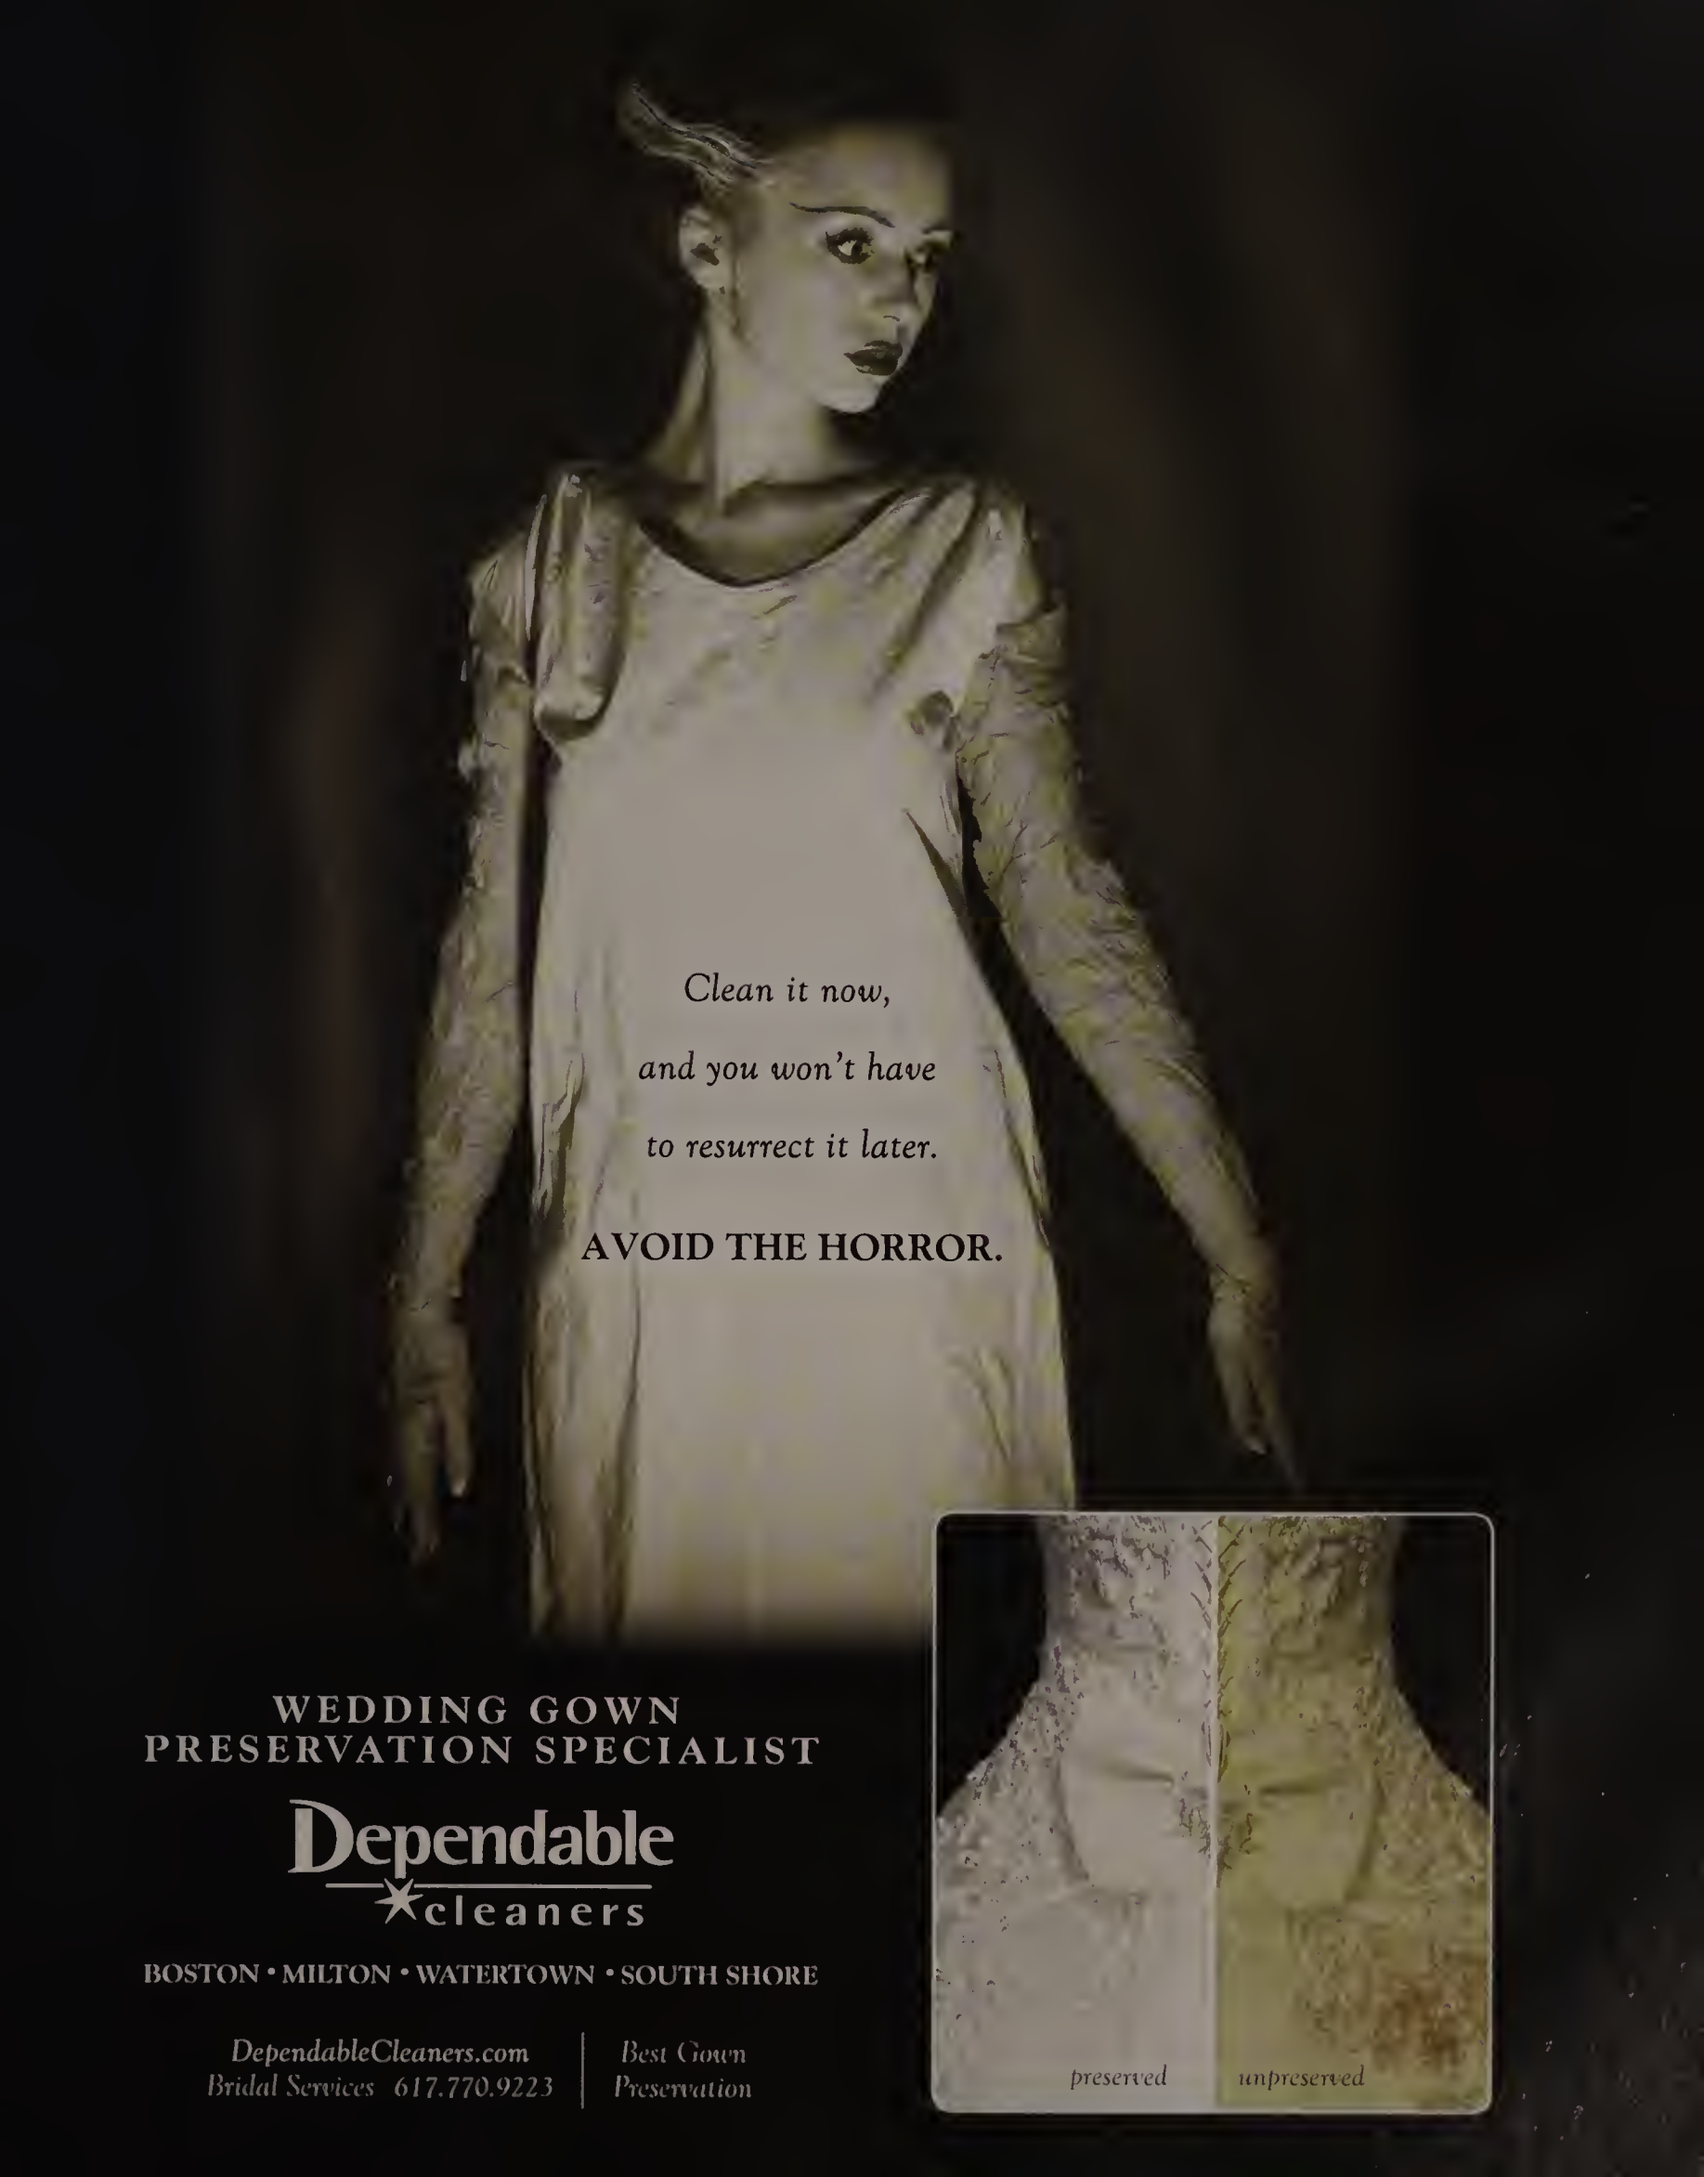
"Everybody loves margaritas and everybody loves tacos, it's just about doing it in a way that's a little bit more fun and little bit more exciting," Power says.

With a dining room that seats about 200, a lounge area complete with luxurious couches and a menu filled with shareable apps and entrees, Frattaroli hopes this space will become a destination that brings people together.

"I think we just really like to build restaurants that we would want to hang out at," Power says. "You can come here on a date because the place looks sexy and romantic; the lights are dim. But you can come here with a group and it feels exciting."

While this restaurant may be a departure from what diners and sports fans have grown accustomed to near TD Garden, Frattaroli says it will find its footing.

"I really believe in this concept," he says. "I think it fits the area perfectly and I think it fits the space perfectly."



Good Eats: Spanish Fly

The latest six-month culinary residency at Wink & Nod, Pareja brings a Spanish flavor to the subterranean speakeasy for the first time. Chef Aaron Lhamon's pop-up aims to give the molecular gastronomy treatment to some Spanish staples such as papas bravas. The early favorite uses a touch of yellow wine and boquerones aioli, but this take on a classic stands out with garlic three ways—as a white powder, an oil and a roasted puree. The ingredients are fancily adorned, dressing up a pile of roasted potatoes. "Everyone knows it as a traditional Spanish plate," Lhamon says. "But we put our own modern twist on it." / Matt Martinelli

Drink of the Moment
BANCROFT'S CASTLE

PRICE: $14

INGREDIENTS: Glendalough Wild Botanical Gin, Clear Creek Douglas Fir Eau de Vie, spruce and lime

TASTE: Cultivar's bar director Dan Lynch steers mojito drinkers toward this take on a gin sour that uses an Irish spirit distilled with foraged berries, fruits and other botanicals from the Wicklow countryside and also features an Alpine-tinged unaged brandy a couple of drops of absinthe and a touch of sugar.

WHAT'S IN A NAME: The handcrafted cocktail is served in potter Jeremy Ogusky's hand-thrown dishware, the shape of which reminded Lynch of a tower in Groton that's the remnants of a 19th-century general's unrealized retirement home.

PAIR IT WITH: Something from the raw menu, like the southeast Asian-inspired tuna crudo ($15) with coconut, lemongrass and cashew.

ON THE HUNT: Lynch often consults the kitchen for both tips and ingredients, explaining, "We're definitely into finding things that nature has, seeing what they taste like and letting them shine." Outside of Cultivar's shipping container garden, executive chef Mary Dumont works with foragers and has even brought in elderflower from her Groton property—take a look at the Sunflower cocktail with notes of orange and lemon. The hunt-and-gather ethos makes gin a natural fit as the star of the beverage program; Lynch even tapped GrandTen to whip up a house blend using foraged white fir tips.

ELSEWHERE ON THE MENU: Manhattan drinkers should go for the Hearst, which makes use of an aged gin, and gin fiends can go all-in with the Contessa, a beloved Negroni variation crafted by former Drink bartender John Gertsen that swaps Campari for Aperol / Sarah Hagman

Purveyors: Natural Chemistry

Gayatri Pradhan's stacked resume includes a pharmaceutical chemistry degree from MIT and a long run working for the Vaseline and Dove brands at Unilever, but along the way she learned mothers do indeed know best. "I grew up with my mom, if she saw a pimple on my face, she'd dash at it with a paste of turmeric and sandalwood," Pradhan says. "Back then I'd be like, 'Mom, what are you doing?'" Botanicals now star in her Wellesley-based skin care brand Poéthique that taps the wisdom of other cultures' wellness rituals, from China's herbal medicine to Northern Europe's spa waters. Pradhan spent three years ensuring she was sustainably sourcing ingredients and workers were earning fair wages before launching a serum late last year made of caviar lime and wild plums foraged from Australia. And this month, a cleanser with antimicrobial neem oil and a regenerating facial elixir with oils from India, Peru and Polynesia joined Poéthique's lineup, which soon will include fully plant-based masks and lip care that prove one thing: "You don't really need to go to synthetic stuff to get effective skin care." / Sarah Hagman

GREEN MACHINES: A Wellesley skin care brand scours the globe for its botanical ingredients.

Q&A

DOWN TO A SCIENCE

Good Eats gerent and Cutthroot Kitchen king Alton Brown follows up his hit Edible Inevitable live tour with a new culinary variety show, Eat Your Science, that fills two hours with music, comedy and, of course, gastronomic experiments. Before Brown drops by the Boch Wang Theatre on Oct. 28, he spills on his onstage antics and cooking at home / Cothryn Haight

HOW DID YOU DISCOVER YOUR LOVE OF COOKING? I started cooking in college to get dates. I'm not going to lie. It just turned out that I kind of liked it and started pursuing it as a hobby, but it was originally just to get girls.

WHICH ELEMENT OF EAT YOUR SCIENCE ARE YOU MOST EXCITED ABOUT? It's always the audience interaction. There's a lot of audience interaction and volunteers used in the show, and without them the show would be the same every night. But because we let volunteers have a lot of say in the way that the show goes, it makes it a different show every night. Having that unexpected "what's going to happen tonight?" kind of feel is very seductive for me.

WHAT CAN AN AUDIENCE MEMBER EXPECT IF YOU PULL THEM ON STAGE? [Laughs.] Well, I don't want to scare people away, so loads of fun. I put people to work. There'll be things to do, stuff to taste. It's a pretty full-immersion experience. There might be a little mess, but we provide plenty of protective garments so you know people are OK there. And it depends on which act they come up in, so we'll say, "expect the unexpected" and leave it at that.

WHAT'S YOUR FAVORITE DISH TO MAKE AT HOME? I am an extremely simple cook at home. I'm a carnivore and I'm pretty good with meat cookery, so I'm going to say a simple roasted chicken would be my favorite thing to do.

WHAT FOOD NETWORK CHEF WOULD YOU CHALLENGE TO A COOK-OFF? [Laughs.] Wow. That's tough. I think that I would probably go up against Iron Chef Morimoto, if I could pick one. I mean, why not, right? Pick a legend, go up against somebody that, you know, odds are you're going to get your ass kicked so you might as well go ahead and go for it.

WHAT FOOD TREND DO YOU WISH WOULD JUST END ALREADY? I don't ever want to see another cupcake for the rest of my life. I hate cupcakes, I don't like cupcakes, I've never liked cupcakes, so anytime I see cupcakes on my Instagram, I'm like, "Damn it, I've had enough of these cupcakes. No more cupcakes!" People seem to really like them, so I don't know if I'm going to win on that one.

CONFESSIONS OF A WEDDING DJ

With five years in the wedding business, DJ Joe Del Buono has his fair share of opinions on how to keep the music banging on the dance floor. The Emerson grad, who cut his teeth at WERS-FM (88.9), shared some of his likes and dislikes with us. / Matt Martinelli

What's your favorite party-starting song to play? Anything from the Motown era never fails to set a celebration off properly. It's such an inclusive era and gets everyone from grandma to your music elitists involved on the floor. One of my favorite can't-miss starter songs is Hall & Oates' "You Make My Dreams." It's a great intro and an easy buildup to open the floor with and make the dinner-to-dancing transition a breeze for everyone. ... Everyone knows the song and will proceed to cut up a rug. If they don't, you're at the wrong wedding.

What's your least favorite song to play? There are so many repeat offenders. I stay far away from anything that has a dance associated with it such as "Macarena," "Electric Slide," "Cupid Shuffle"—except Soulja Boy's "Crank That" because it always get me hype. My least favorite song to play (I've only had to play it once, thankfully) is Black Eyed Peas' "I Gotta Feeling" because it's just incredibly corny and basic. If that's in your set, then tonight's gonna be a bad night.

What's the weirdest song request you've had that revved up the crowd? This isn't necessarily a "weird song" because it's one of my all-time favorite tracks, but one wedding I DJed was sort of winding down later in the evening when a guest came up to my table and requested UGK's "Int'l Players Anthem." I gave my look of approval and said to myself, "Great selection, but probably no one will dance to this besides me and this dude." But for whatever reason, it re-energized the floor with all generations, and people were crawling up the walls like it was a concert.

SHADES OF BLACK

A HARVARD LAW GRAD GRAPPLES WITH HER IDENTITY

Real American* by Julie Lythcott-Haims
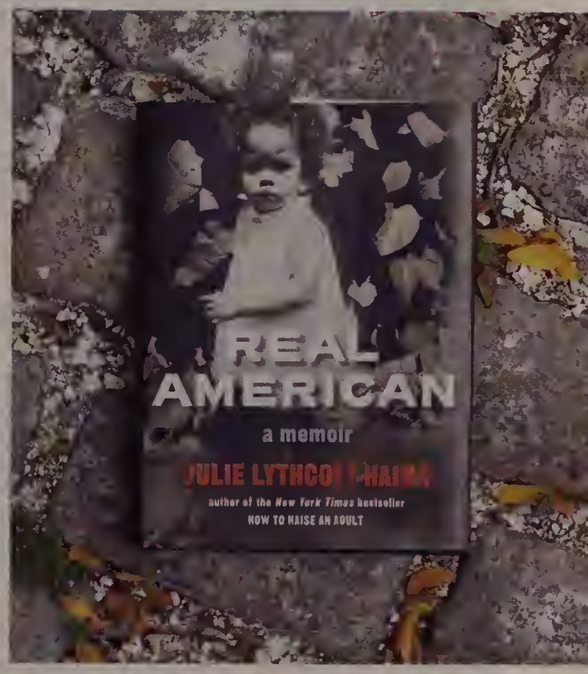
Published by Henry Holt & Company, 272 pages, $27



FIERCE AND EMPHATIC FROM THE first page, Julie Lythcott-Haims' self-searching memoir unrolls her own relationship to race and its evolving meaning in her world. The title is sharply ironic as white people increasingly claim to be "Real Americans," and the book's chapters include subsections ranging from one sentence to multiple pages.

Lythcott-Haims recalls her childhood as the biracial daughter of a black man and a white woman. Her father was a prominent doctor and she grew up in privilege while attending a mostly white school. As Lythcott-Haims struggles to find her identity, her hairstyles symbolically echo her shifting affiliations. One friend compliments her as seeming "normal, not black," but on her locker, alongside friendly birthday notes, someone writes the n-word.

This brainy, intense woman went on to graduate from Harvard Law School and become a dean at Stanford. Her anxiety over her ambiguous skin tone increases when she marries a white man and has a darker son and a lighter daughter. She fears for her son's safety and advises him on self-protective behavior, but she equally yearns for her daughter to identify as black, even holding her up to the sun while imagining she'd figuratively "tan" her skin and consciousness.

Later, when fellow biracial Harvard Law grad Barack Obama wants her on the campaign trail, she still questions her identity as a black person. Yet as black men are shot and incarcerated at alarming rates, her attention and outrage turn outward. With help from her black and biracial students, she embraces their common causes. Throughout the memoir, painful questions ring like ominous bells, hopefully raising alarm for all readers.

PAGE 214: "I realize that while a white man talking to himself in this town is a tech genius in this white man's eyes I am likely homeless or crazy in my ripped Harvard Law School T-shirt I must have gotten from Goodwill and when I get to the checkout lane I try to perform the part of a white person so they don't ask me for an ID." ◆

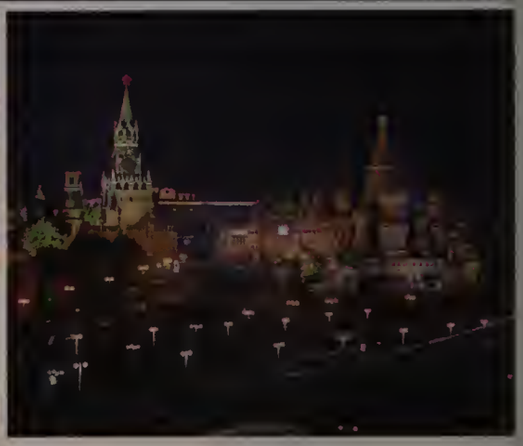
Traveler's Checks



The Sapsan bullet train takes less than four hours to get from St. Petersburg's Moskovsky Station to Leningradskaya Station in the heart of Moscow.

Unlike most of Europe where museums are closed on Mondays or Tuesdays, closures in St. Petersburg rotate between the iconic locations; Fabergé is closed on Fridays, for example.

TWO CITIES: The Hermitage Museum is a must-see destination in St Petersburg, while Moscow, below right, offers many delights.

SPYING RUSSIA

ADMIRE IMPERIAL CAPITALS AND MODERN MARVELS

EVER WANTED TO WEAR YOUR sunglasses at night? Your best chance may be in St. Petersburg, where thanks to the natural phenomenon known as White Nights (from May till late July), the sun finally dips below the horizon at 11:30. That makes for long days of sightseeing that stretch into longer evenings of revelry—a perfect combination for a trip to Russia's second-largest city.

Take off your shades to admire the jewels of imperial Russia at Bellevue Brasserie, nestled high above the city. Locals and visitors alike are drawn to the Kempinski Hotel's 360-degree restaurant, especially to marvel at the nearby Hermitage Museum as the day's last rays reflect off a green facade as vibrant as pistachio sherbet. On the ground, exploring the former Winter Palace of Empress Catherine the Great—and the many artworks she collected that are now on display to the public—could take days, so plan at least one if not two afternoons to meander.

More splendor awaits at Peterhof, Peter the Great's imperial suburban complex inspired by the grandeur of Louis the XIV's Versailles, and its magnificent fountains are another great reason to visit St. Petersburg in the summer. The palaces and gardens are a must-stop so you can admire the Grand Cascade, a splashing symphony that was the 18th-century version of Las Vegas' Bellagio extravaganza.

Getting there by plane, train and automobile is half the fun; starting in the center of St. Petersburg, the commute via car is about an hour. As you weave past iconic onion domes like those on Church of the Savior of the Spilled Blood and over the bridges spanning labyrinthine canals, guides like Esperance Travel's Marina Leonko will lend greater context to a history as expansive as the steppes of the Motherland. Unlike intuitive Romance languages, Russian is as difficult to pick up on as purported; though street and subway signs are in English, it's worth it to sit back and relax on the ride as the former litcrature and art professor regales you with centuries of tales of war, royalty, hubris and what it was like growing up under Communist rule. Plus, there are insights into the best foodic markets (Yeliseev Emporium) and "hidden" restaurants (Cafe Singer). Ride back into the city on thc high-speed hydrofoil, which cuts thc commute in half and doubles the excitement. Coasting on top of the water's surface, you'll get an expansive view as you re-enter St. Petersburg, enough to inspire you to return for a slow-speed tour.

Dcspite its appellation as "Venice of the North," this Russian gem's canals are much wider than those in Italy or Amsterdam, and there's plenty of hop-on/hop-off options on a cruise past highlights like Peter and Paul Fortress (the city's original citadel) or Michael Garden, which adjoins the Russian Museum. The best bet is to plan indoor museum visits and outdoor activities around the weather, for even in the height of summcr the temperatures crest at 70 degrees. Railway aficionados won't be able to resist the lure of Grand Maket Rossiya, an 8,600-square-foot model train museum that presents the entire Russian Federation in miniature. Laughing at playful polar bears in Siberia or marveling at the onion domes of Moscow make for an easy way to spend an afternoon.

Thosc with an extra day to travel can head to Moscow via a real train that whisks riders to the country's capital, where history lovcrs will have their breath taken away. Admire the Candy Landlikc spires of St. Basil's Cathedral, just as colorful today as when they were finished in 1561, or snake your way through the lines outside of Lenin's tomb. But for all that is old, there is lots developing in Moscow, including brand-new Moss Boutiquc Hotel, which sports minimalist modern design and modern local art. Bicyclists will rejoice with free wheels, and trendy in-house eatery Coffccmania whips up excellent cappuccinos for fueling up. Traditionalists may prefer tea from a samovar or vodka tasting, and Cafe Kranzler Bar & Terrace fits the bill with views toward thc Krcmlin and Bolshoy Moskvoretsky Bridge. Although Russia isn't exactly renowned for its cuisine, much of it is quite good and fans of the Netflix series Chef's Table should add Moscow's White Rabbit rcstaurant and the panorama from its glass-domed roof to their agenda.

Back in St. Petersburg, fill up for a long day of sightseeing at Kempinski's lavish brcakfast spread beforc visiting the spectacular Fabergé Museum for eggs of another kind. Nine Imperial Easter Eggs make up the museum's 4,000-plus-picce collcction, but there are morc than simply million-dollar eggs at the muscum. With many pieces collected from the royal family on display, Fabergé, much like St. Petersburg, has plenty of jewels to see.

MOON AND THE STARS

MOONCUSSER FISH HOUSE BLENDS MODERN DASH AND OLD-WORLD ELEGANCE

Trends in the restaurant business ebb and flow like the tides. French bistro has a moment and blazes brightly until customers flit to the next vogue du jour; a few years later, it all comes around again. Meanwhile, some motifs are constants, waiting for customers to find them, usually after shedding some youthful preconception like: "White tablecloth restaurants are too quiet." Folks eventually value the intimacy of a room that doesn't demand shouting over a 90-decibel din. A little genteel formality in service and ambiance can be refreshing, even romantic. That's the ethos that partners Ian Calhoun, Vincent Vela and chef Carolyn Johnson of Concord's 80 Thoreau are clearly chasing at Mooncusser Fish House, an oasis of ever-so-slightly retro refinement three floors up a spiral staircase in the Back Bay.

Not that the place feels fusty: The triangular, 60-seat room is a model of modern understatement in tones of white, cream, blonde and black, many seats featuring lovely views of the neighboring Castle at Park Plaza. A well-trained, attentive staff pads lithely about, with Calhoun and Vela playing ingratiating hosts. The old-school touches aren't too over-the-top: The butter dish accompanying bread service has a wee silver dome, but your place setting has a sensible three pieces, not 20. Noise levels support easy conversation when the place is packed, yielding a feeling that is civil but lively, not hushed. It's the kind of fish house where the first offering is a five-course tasting ($85, wine pairings another $55): fancy.

Johnson plates her menu of local seafood with painterly precision, some swish ingredients and a big dose of classical technique and refinement. Mooncusser chowder ($12) is a comparatively humble but smashing first course: a handful of pristine littlenecks in the shell, chopped clams, bits of smoked scallop and skate, and crescent-shaped oyster crackers in a delicate, not overly dairy-dosed broth. Scallop tartare ($16) is a generous fistful of velvety, coarsely diced flesh flecked with sweet corn, chives, waxed pepper and vanishingly mild bits of summer truffle, plus waffle chips for dipping. Tuna crudo ($15), four islands of rather thick-cut ruby tuna topped with wafers of pickled rhubarb and fennel, makes a brilliant Instagram post, but its flavors are muted, even bland. Heirloom tomatoes ($15) capture the last sweet whiff of a fading summer, perfect by themselves but given a kicky boost with squid and basil. Nicely pan-seared gnocchi ($17) boasts earthy chanterelles and a mild mustard sauce, but the promised uni amounts to a mere curl or two, a problem in a dish that needs more briny umami and perhaps some acid—the main impression here is of butter.

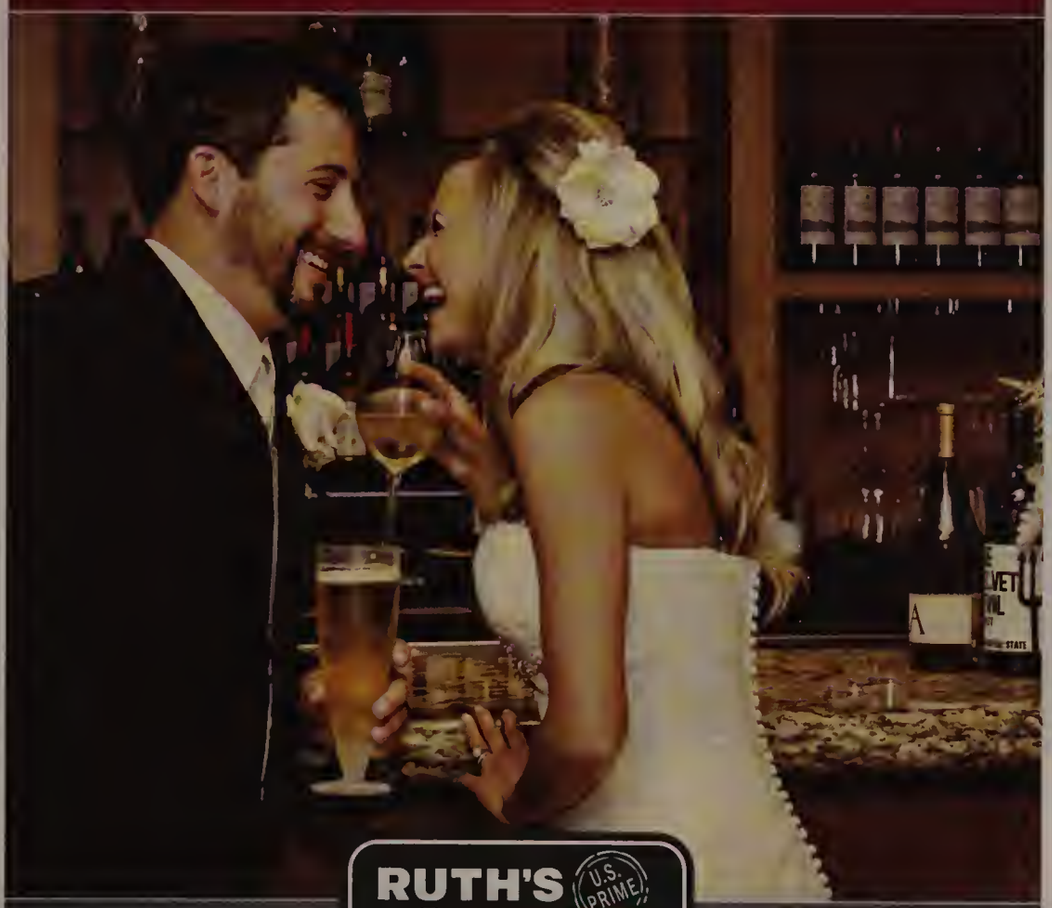
Monkfish ($35) has similar issues. It's a few pan-roasted pieces of rich, firm-fleshed fish with tender, faintly bitter kohlrabi stalks in a thick, pale yellow tarragon bourride that registers too monochromatic on the eye and the tongue. The tarragon disappears into the butterfat-bomb of a sauce; a less stingy hand with the promised caviar (and again, some acid) would add needed contrasting accents. Other entrees offer more finely calibrated balance, like a beautifully browned fillet of skate ($30) wrapped around a vivid, rich filling of Maine lobster chunks and potato puree with chard stems and baby carrots alongside, and underneath, a lovely, subtle sauce Américaine. Guinea hen ($34) is another picture-pretty and delicious dish, boneless slices of fowl with a forcemeat-like layer of stuffing that adds superb meatiness underneath crisp skin atop a foundation of kale, plums, sharp edible flowers and delicate, crisp phyllo turnovers filled with thigh meat. The second-course showstopper is a whole grilled black bass ($40) expertly cooked to just-doneness, with dead-simple seasonings of saffron and cherry tomatoes plus a scattering of chickpeas—an impeccably fresh local specimen whose flavors are allowed to speak for themselves. (Ask for help with tableside filleting if you're not practiced at it.)

Pastry chef Katie Hamilburg's modernist desserts resemble abstract sculptures sparely arrayed on white plates, like a rectangle of mascarpone mousse ($12) topped with a teardrop of vanilla gelato, a brace of caramelized fig halves and a cube of bubbly honeycomb candy—as exquisite to look at as it is delectable.



There's enough range on the 300-deep, French-leaning bottle list ($33-$675, most under $100, plenty under $70) to impress a date or business partner; we thought a nonvintage Guy Larmandier "Vertus" Premier Cru champagne ($93) was a bargain. There's also good value in 16 wines by-the-glass ($12-$21), six small-producer beers (all $7/bottle) and a tight list of fortified wines by-the-glass suitable for dessert ($9-$14).

Though the kitchen may occasionally need a freer hand with lemons and luxury ingredients, this place represents a worthy first incursion into hyper-competitive Boston proper for a team that made its bones in the leafy, sleepy exurbs. And to the kind of customer who's just coming around to certain venerable restaurant virtues—old-world panache, the mannerly tableau of crisp linens and fine stemware, and the ability to murmur a subtle proposition and actually be heard—Mooncusser, far too elegant to be called a mere fish house, offers a sumptuous primer. ◆

Q: DO MEN EVER GET LASER HAIR REMOVAL DONE?

A: Absolutely! Lots of men opt for laser hair removal to give them increased confidence and comfort.

It is a wonderful option for permanently removing hair on parts of the body where it is not wanted or is unsightly. The most common treatment areas for men are the back and shoulders, and often the chest. Other popular areas are the back of the neck, the ab strip and even ear hair.

Several treatments are necessary to permanently reduce or eliminate the hair, but significant results can be seen even after one session. There is no downtime, but sun exposure needs to be avoided during the treatment phase.

Consultations are complimentary, so come talk to us!

REPLICAN'T

A DISAPPOINTINGLY SYNTHETIC SEQUEL TO A SCI-FI CLASSIC

If I never see Blade Runner 2049 again, it'll be too soon.

It feels strange saying this about the long-awaited sequel to 1982's Blade Runner, a movie I've seen dozens upon dozens of times in its various forms. Director Ridley Scott's hugely influential "future noir" was neither a critical nor commercial success when it initially hit cinemas; the compromised cut featured a studio-mandated voiceover narration that spelled out far too much and a literally sunny conclusion that flew in the face of the rain-soaked dystopia that preceded it. But in the 35 years since, no fewer than seven different versions have emerged, and most observers agree that Blade Runner is a masterpiece. That's something I'll never accuse its sequel of, despite the warm critical reception that it has received.

I'm in the extreme minority, but Blade Runner 2049 flat-out angered me. Produced by Scott but directed by Denis Villeneuve (Oscar nominee for last year's equally overpraised sci-fi Arrival), this new film is bloated and self-important, while the original was ponderous yet subtle. Time has been kind to Scott's expressionistic triumph of production design, pioneering electronic music, shadow-laden cinematography and story about the very human urge to fit in, but Villeneuve's overlong sequel is very much a product of 2017, despite its 2049 setting. The small-scaled intimacy of the '82 picture has been replaced by nearly everything that's wrong with contemporary filmmaking: Who needs ambiguity when Hollywood studios are in the franchise business? This two-hour-and-44-minute film greatly concerns itself with world-building, moving beyond Blade Runner's lone location of 2019 Los Angeles and laying the groundwork for more theoretical sequels. It also finds the time to crib from Spike Jonze's vastly superior Her, a sci-fi romance that centered on a lonely writer whose mobile operating system doubled as his artificially intelligent, self-learning girlfriend.

Most observers agree that Blade Runner is a masterpiece. That's something I'll never accuse its sequel of, despite the warm critical reception that it has received.

In Blade Runner 2049, Villeneuve's version of an A.I. character, Joi, leaves little to the imagination, having been granted a lithe holographic body courtesy of Cuban actress Ana de Armas (of last year's War Dogs and Hands of Stone). And her relationship with this film's protagonist, K (Ryan Gosling), a second-generation blade runner—a cop tasked with hunting down and "retiring" (i.e.: killing) rogue replicants—lacks the complexity and, most damningly, the passion that fueled the relationship between Harrison Ford's earlier blade runner and Sean Young's unique replicant in Scott's original. Part of this is due to the booming, wall-to-wall white noise of the score by Hans Zimmer (Dunkirk) and Benjamin Wallfisch (It), which relies heavily on electronic percussion in place of Greek composer Vangelis' iconic and dreamy synthesizer themes that are just as responsible for the '82 production's smoky romantic mood as its visuals. With such a tough act to follow, it seems Zimmer and Wallfisch (who replaced Villeneuve's longtime collaborator, composer Jóhann Jóhannsson) didn't even bother to try.

However, there are a few bright spots in the film beyond the sumptuous cinematography by 13-time Oscar nominee Roger Deakins (whose work would match the late Jordan Cronenweth's on the original if it weren't so sterile). I'm speaking about Ford's much-hyped return to his role as Rick Deckard. Ford's often been unfairly criticized for delivering wooden performances, but when he eventually shows his face during the film's final hour, the warmth he brings to his old role not only shames Gosling (who rather fittingly is introduced asleep at the wheel), but also deepens the long-standing mystery of whether or not Deckard is a replicant himself.

Few such mysteries exist in the screenplay credited to returning writer Hampton Fancher and newcomer Michael Green. The script is predictable when it's not spelling everything out in synthetically expository dialogue delivered by the pretty young performers who have mostly replaced the lived-in faces and engaging eccentrics who populated Scott's much dirtier vision of the future.

When it comes to the future, I'm happy to stick with the past. ◆

BONDS AND BALANCE

A SINGER/SONGWRITER MULLS DUALITY WITH HER PARTNER IN MUSIC AND LIFE

"WE ARE DEFINITELY LIVING a precarious, beautiful dream," Kris Delmhorst says of her life with husband Jeffrey Foucault—both seasoned working singer/songwriters forging independent careers under the same roof.

"Booking two different people's careers is like trying to steer two ocean liners around each other," Delmhorst says from their home in the Berkshires village of Shelburne Falls. "I'm sort of amazed by couples that can play all their music together, 'cause to me, it just sounds claustrophobic. It's great to have a world of together and it's great to have a realm that you go to that's your own."

That means that she and Foucault retire to separate parts of their house to work on music. "Our aesthetic is probably the most similar part about us, and the process is spectacularly different," Delmhorst says. "I'm upstairs, he's downstairs, and we call it hunter/gatherer. He has some idea of what he's aiming for, and I'm more prone to exploring the unknown [to] see what I come out with."

But after two decades of folk-based music careers, 13 years of marriage and a routine supporting their lives as parents to their 9-year-old daughter, the couple has undertaken their first collaborative venture since their early trio, Redbird with Peter Mulvey. Foucault co-produced and performed on Delmhorst's September release The Wild, and they're sharing the stage of ONCE Ballroom on Oct. 21 as part of their co-billed tour.

"It's sort of the work of circling back and digging down another layer and finding another way to renew your inspiration and focus and learn new things," she says of their musical pursuits. "That's actually what a lot of the record is about, going through that process of getting disoriented or slack or lost or disillusioned and having to buckle down and find a new way in, a new door."

"Booking two different people's careers is like trying to steer two ocean liners around each other."

Indeed, The Wild casts a shadowy sense of reflection, from the darkness and tension of the opening "All the Way Around" to the more uplifting yet similarly shaded tones of "Foolish Blood." The title track lingers on the more mysterious side of the album's spectrum. "Remember how you used to live there too," Delmhorst sings, her earthy voice riding a breathy edge on the words "in the wild" as she muses about the space between our animal instincts and domesticated lives.

On the album, she plays cello in addition to joining Foucault on guitar and keyboards, supported by onetime Morphine drummer Billy Conway (who played on Delmhorst's 1998 debut Appetite, produced her early albums and tours with Foucault), bassist Jeremy Moses Curtis and pedal-steel guitarist Alex McCollough. Eric Heywood (Son Volt, the Pretenders) takes over pedal-steel duties on tour.

Raised in Brooklyn, Delmhorst balanced classical training with a love for Top 40 radio and a high-school obsession with bluesmen Little Walter and Jimmy Reed. "I'm sort of an omnivore," says the singer, who cites Neil Young, Tom Waits and Joni Mitchell among go-to inspirations. In 2011, as "a lark," she recorded a tribute to Boston new-wave heroes the Cars, with the group's keyboardist Greg Hawkes joining her on ukulele. "I wanted to take the car apart to find out how it worked," says Delmhorst, who bought the Cars' Heartbeat City on cassette at age 13. "I literally did take those songs apart and figure out what each piece was doing."

But it took a while to find her muse when she was younger, moving from Brooklyn to Maine to work on a farm, where she recovered from a broken ankle in a cabin without electricity. "I was on crutches, in a lot of snow," Delmhorst says. "I was housebound and learned a lot of fiddle tunes." In the '90s, after following a boyfriend to Boston, she busked in the Davis Square MBTA station and hit open mics. "It was such a transformational time for me, like going to school," she says. "Not just for songwriting, but for being on stage and delivering songs and connecting with an audience."

By day, Delmhorst still worked on a farm in Lincoln. Now, she's tending her own gardens, of both vegetables and music, in Shelburne Falls. "There's a little more space—obviously physical space but also mental space—out here." ◆

POLITICS IS OFFICIALLY OFF THE TABLE

"You've gotta shut up or we're not going to have any friends," my wife, Heather, tells me after a house party. This statement comes after a spirited political debate over whatever controversy was brewing at that moment. And when I think about it just a little bit, I realize she's right. No good can come of political debates. I didn't change anyone's mind but I probably did cause a few of them to cross me off their invite lists. When you start arguing politics, the people who agree with you aren't going to think you're any more wonderful but the people on the other side of the spectrum will definitely think you're a cretin. There's no upside. Want to know my political beliefs? Just imagine that they match whatever yours are. There: Now we're friends! As opposed to the alternative, which is thinking that I'm Satan, if Satan could hate America just a little bit more.

It wasn't always like this. Back in a more innocent age (early 2016), I went skiing with some friends whose views, in general, oppose mine. But when we took one of those online "Who should you vote for?" quizzes—I know, we like to party—we discovered that none of us were really too far apart on most major issues. It seemed like a revelation to discover that most of us are in the middle. We agree on some stuff from over here, and other stuff from over there. But that's not how you're allowed to think anymore. You've got to pick a team and slavishly defend that team on every single issue, even ones you don't deeply believe, because otherwise you're a traitor. The issues don't matter. The team is what matters.

Thus it is truly pointless to espouse your political views. You think you're going to persuade a Colts fan that the Patriots have some good ideas? You think you can convince me that former Yankees right fielder Paul O'Neill wasn't a golem summoned from the depths of hell to torment New Englanders at the turn of the millennium? Of course not. And that's why I ignore politics in this column: I need all the readers I can get. Even those of you who are total idiots! And by total idiots, you know who I mean. The people who believe the other stuff.

As a writer, this is a logical policy. The multinational corporate leviathan known as Ezrariffic Productions seeks the broadest possible market, so I embrace the mouth-breathers and the commies, the hillbillies and the citybillies, morons and dweebs alike. What most of you fail to realize is that everyone could benefit from adopting this strategy. Because unless you're a professional pundit, you've got nothing to gain by spouting off your political viewpoints, either in person or on social media.

To cite just one example, I know a couple guys who vaguely know each other but are friends on Facebook. One of those guys was in a position to throw some work to the other. But the potential beneficiary of said gig regards his Facebook page as the perfect venue for political screeds, which are 180 degrees from the views held by the boss man. If the employer is a Pats fan, do you think he'll be real excited to hire the guy wearing the David Tyree jersey? No, he will not.

Not so long ago, neither of those guys would have any idea what the other one thought about, say, North Korea or Colin Kaepernick. You wouldn't even know what your closest family members thought about any of that until they got drunk at Thanksgiving. And even then, at some point there was an uncomfortable silence so awkward that it lasted till the next fall, when you picked up the thread on why Aunt Claire's opinion on Planned Parenthood is so ironic. Now, thanks to smartphones and share-everything social mores, you know way too much about everyone—especially their politics. I've got to admit, it's pretty convenient to skip straight to hating people without even having to talk to them.

I'm not at all above this instantly judgmental behavior, which is why I'm so wary of it being turned on me. For instance, I have some neighbors at an intersection who had their lawn festooned with political signs last year. Before those signs went up, I was typically considerate when accelerating away from the stop sign. Now the signs are long gone, but I still do a spite-burnout in front of their house just about every day. Screw 'em. They could be nice people who rescue sick animals, volunteer at the homeless shelter and tithe 20 percent of their income to the Jimmy Fund. But I just assume they're terrible human beings. It's the easy thing to do. And that's why I don't put up signs or slap bumper stickers on my car. Besides, who cares what I think?

Oh, you do? Well, I'm flattered. So I'll tell you. But quietly. I mean, I totally agree with your side, but I have a feeling we're surrounded by idiots. ◆

And that's why I ignore politics in this column: I need all the readers I can get.

A LOSING GAME

SOUND ADVICE ON FOOTBALL FANDOM, WARRING PARENTS AND HOLIDAY MAYHEM

JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book is No One Ever Told Us That: Money and Life Lessons for Young Adults. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com.

Football season is upon us. The problem is, I hate football. And the person I'm in love with absolutely lives for this time of year. He has season tickets and wants to take me to a game. How can I tell him it's my idea of torture without upsetting him? He thinks this is such a great thing to offer me. I would love to have more interests in common, but I really have an aversion to this sport with overpaid players. Should I be honest with him or suck it up, put a smile on my face and just go? We can do incredibly stupid, unnecessary, dishonest, dangerous and immature things for love—and that doesn't even scratch the surface. Going to a football game is nothing. It's easy. Maybe you should be honest and say, "Do you really want me, need me, at games? You can be truthful with me. Aren't you happier with your friends for this? If not, I'm delighted to go with you." Think of it this way: If you can't stand football, you can ask him to do two things he can't stand for you. He'll agree out of guilt, and you'll have a companion at your favorite band's concert or while binge-watching your favorite series on Netflix.

Concentrate each day on the five most important things you have to do. A football game shouldn't even make your list.

My mother is a Democrat, and my father is a Republican. She watches CNN, and my father watches Fox News. It's like a war zone in my family. How can I negotiate a truce? A child will always lose if he or she has the answers for parents who vehemently disagree about things like politics or watching sports instead of reality shows, or whether the house is too hot or too cold. The only time it can work out is when parents are really elderly—or alone and very needy physically and mentally. Then they'll accept mediation from children, when they're too frail to fight back. While they're still volatile and feisty, and the friction is about politics, nobody wins. People will almost never be won over to the other side in a political argument, particularly these days.

Friends of mine, a married couple, have a pact when they dine out with others. Whoever is first to bring up the subject of health or ailments has to pay for the meal. That eliminates that discussion, as everyone of a certain age tries to top each other with "who's hurting more." Perhaps you can suggest this to your parents: Whoever brings up the subject of politics first has to buy the other a gift that costs at least $100. That ought to minimize the bickering.

But you should understand that many parents argue about all kinds of things—it's as if it's part of their daily routine and they'd miss it if it didn't take place. If you're ever married for a long time, you'll probably come to know what I mean.

We can do incredibly stupid, unnecessary, dishonest, dangerous and immature things for love—and that doesn't even scratch the surface.

If you're there when your folks fight, have a drink and go with the flow.

With the holidays approaching, I feel my anxiety level increasing. I know it's supposed to be a special time of year, but I dread the pressure of giving and receiving gifts: Who to gift or not gift, tipping who and how much, etc. I'm afraid I may forget someone important in my life. I end up making a list like Santa Claus. Then there are the parties or events and what to bring, what to wear. Do you have any advice as to how to navigate the holidays with less stress so I can actually enjoy the season with the warmth and love I should feel? The good news is that it sounds as if you get invited to multiple parties and have "important" people in your life. So many people feel alone and quite depressed around the holidays. The bad news? There is nothing, zero, nada, you can do to avoid the stress of the holidays, and it goes double for those with Type A personalities. But I'll tell you what I try to do to limit the knots in my stomach.

- Give to only the most important people in your life. You know who they are. Send all the others a card.
- For special people, host a dinner party in a neighborhood restaurant, like Toscano on Charles Street. Pay for it and toast all your friends.
- Buy yourself one special outfit that can be worn with different accessories.
- As for something to bring to your hosts and hostesses, I bring gift bags of pistachios. Everyone usually brings wine or chocolate, which is fine but slightly boring. Pistachios are a lot cheaper than wine, but just as thoughtful, and the recipients will remember that you were a little different and probably invite you again.

My bottom line: Simplify, don't complicate. ◆

THE OLYMPIC MEDALIST CHATS ABOUT ALLIGATORS, ICE CREAM AND SWIMMING IN THE CHARLES

DR. GENEVRA "GEVVIE" STONE, 32, IS AN OLYMPIC silver medalist in rowing and a veteran of the Head of the Charles Regatta, which she will compete in again this year on Oct. 21-22. Born and raised in Newton, she began her rowing career as a student at the Winsor School and then earned a bachelor's degree from Princeton University, where she was a member of the 2006 NCAA Champion Eight. In 2006 and 2007, she won the Under-23 World Championships in the eight and quad competitions. She earned her medical degree from Tufts in 2014 while continuing to row, representing the U.S. in the singles at the 2010 World Cup. Since then she has earned three World Cup medals and competed in three World Championships and two Olympics, earning a silver medal in Rio. Last year, she tied the record for the most wins (7) in the championship single event at the Head of the Charles Regatta. She will begin a residency in emergency medicine in 2018 and plans to pursue a fellowship in sports medicine.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Worst part of crew practice growing up?
GEVVIE STONE: The weather. We'd see all the field hockey and lacrosse players, and their practice would be canceled because of rain. Our coach, who was my mom, would say, "Nope! We're like ducks. We love the rain!" And we didn't actually love the rain. The Charles River in October can be brutal. We used to joke that we knew what it was like for the pilgrims. Wet, windy and cold. Uccchhhh.

One thing you most associate with the Charles River? Camaraderie. Rowing in Boston is so much bigger than most other cities, and it's everyone from novices in high school to the masters. There are a number of Olympians out there every day, and then all of the high school crews, all of the college crews. There's a concentrated amount of space, and everyone has to cooperate to make it work. It's just really cool.

Is knowing the river well your biggest home-course advantage? Yes. Knowing it, steering-wise, but also my friends. I have a lot of people who come out to support me. It's loud as I go by, and it's really motivational, but it's also a lot of pressure.

Worst rowing injury? The injury that kept me out the longest wasn't a rowing injury. I had knee surgery my sophomore year. I dislocated my kneecap for the umpteenth time walking down the stairs. And then I broke my leg my second year of med school. But you don't get many contact injuries in rowing. I have hurt my back, and that's kind of a chronic thing. Lower back and rib stress fractures are the most common rowing injuries, and I've been lucky enough to avoid a rib fracture.

How are your hands? Do you get regular manicures? Oh, God, no. They'd be destroyed in a second. That would be so pointless. You want your calluses, because they protect you from blisters. We had a talk with the team and a nutritionist last year, and they were trying to make people feel good about the fact that a lot of things about rowing are relatively unattractive, as far as typical female beauty ideals are concerned. I like my calluses. I know people think they're disgusting, but that is years of hard work that has gone into my hands being that tough.

"I dropped my Garmin and I was like, 'Ugh, it's too expensive.' I got goggles and jumped in to find it, and it was so murky and black."

Grossest place you've ever capsized? Grossest? The Charles River. Most terrifying? Sarasota, Florida. There are alligators, and they are scary—even the small ones.

Would you swim in the Charles? I've gone in willingly once, because I dropped my Garmin and I was like, "Ugh, it's too expensive." I got goggles and jumped in to find it, and it was so murky and black near the bottom, I immediately gave up.

Least favorite thing to see in the water? Well, I haven't seen a dead body. Yet. Alligator is definitely near the top of the list. I hate snakes, and I've never seen one in the water, but the idea of them swimming is so creepy. But I guess dead fish. Those are always a bad sign, when you see a cluster of dead fish. It smells bad, and you know there's something wrong with the water.

Any superstitions or rituals before you compete? I was weirdly superstitious about ribbons throughout college; I wore the same ribbon in my hair. Then I lost it. Now, I eat ice cream the night before every race. And it's such a thing that my father had to take me to like six different places in France to find ice cream before the semifinals.

What's your diet like when you're in competition mode? Are you super careful? [Laughs.] No. I can eat so much. We burn so many calories. One of the perks of rowing is you can eat as much as you want. I eat 5,000 calories a day. Getting enough protein is a struggle for me, because I just love carbs so much. But lots of ice cream, yogurt, whatever.

Personality trait that's most pronounced in rowers? Well, we're known for being stubborn, because if you think about it, we're doing the same thing over and over and over. You have to be persistent and stubborn to do anything that repetitive.

Best physical feature on rowers? Men or women? I had a college classmate who used to say, "Rowing turns men into gods and women into men." So other than my callouses? Probably my back.

How is it having your father as a coach? Well, it happened gradually, and there definitely were times when it was difficult, but especially in a single, you spend a lot of time by yourself. So it was great to have someone I could chat with, who understood me, and could hear me rant or be a spoiled brat or get excited. I think if it were someone who wasn't my dad, it would have felt a lot more lonely. Another coach wouldn't have indulged my ice cream superstition, either.

Ideal conditions for Head of the Charles? Well, there are two things: current and wind. No one really wants the current, because you want it to be a fair race, and the current is definitely stronger in the middle of the river. So you don't want to force someone into a bad current patch. I personally like a little bit of headwind, although I can't complain when it's completely flat.

One thing you always have with you when you compete? I have a sister who has struggled with bipolar disorder, and once on my birthday, when she was having an episode, she made me a bracelet. I always attach it to my shoe to remind me how lucky I am to be doing this. ◆

Less is More

By Carley D. Thornell

Brides have already broken up with tiaras and Hummer limos. Now, the betrothed are giving over-the-top nuptials the kiss-off. From simple designs on letterpress invites to floral greens pushing aside a rainbow of blossoms, these wedding vendors make going au naturel feel au courant.

Jenny's Wedding Cakes

Goodbye, fondant—the so-called "naked" cake is here to stay. Jenny Williamson says tiered cakes that are airy and light are much more tasteful than other trends she's seen in 20 years in the baking business. Today, her blank canvas is usually embellished with fresh fruits or flowers, and sometimes hand-painted silver or gold leaf. "When antiquing became popular, we had a lot of 'vintage' brides, and then it went overboard into rustic," Williamson says. "I'd call today's preference 'tailored rustic.' It's more structured and approachable." Even flavors have veered from simple vanilla to herbaceous, with crowd favorites such as strawberry-basil and lemon-and-thyme. "It goes back to that whole feel of everything being homemade and homegrown," Williamson says.

Love Notes by June

Though she works on brides of all ethnicities, more and more of them are asking for what's earned June Chan rave reviews from her Asian brides: eye-widening techniques with lots of tasteful false lashes and lighter-toned shadows. "The colors I have to use vary on the culture, but the more color you use the smaller the eye will look," she says. "I always find the soft, romantic, natural look that works for everyone, and that's what they're asking for." Chan adds that most clients are moving away from the heavy foundations of yore for a smooth base of primer, color correction and concealer. She finishes with an airbrushed layer "that's still your own skin and lightweight" but that will stand up during the course of what can be a very long day.

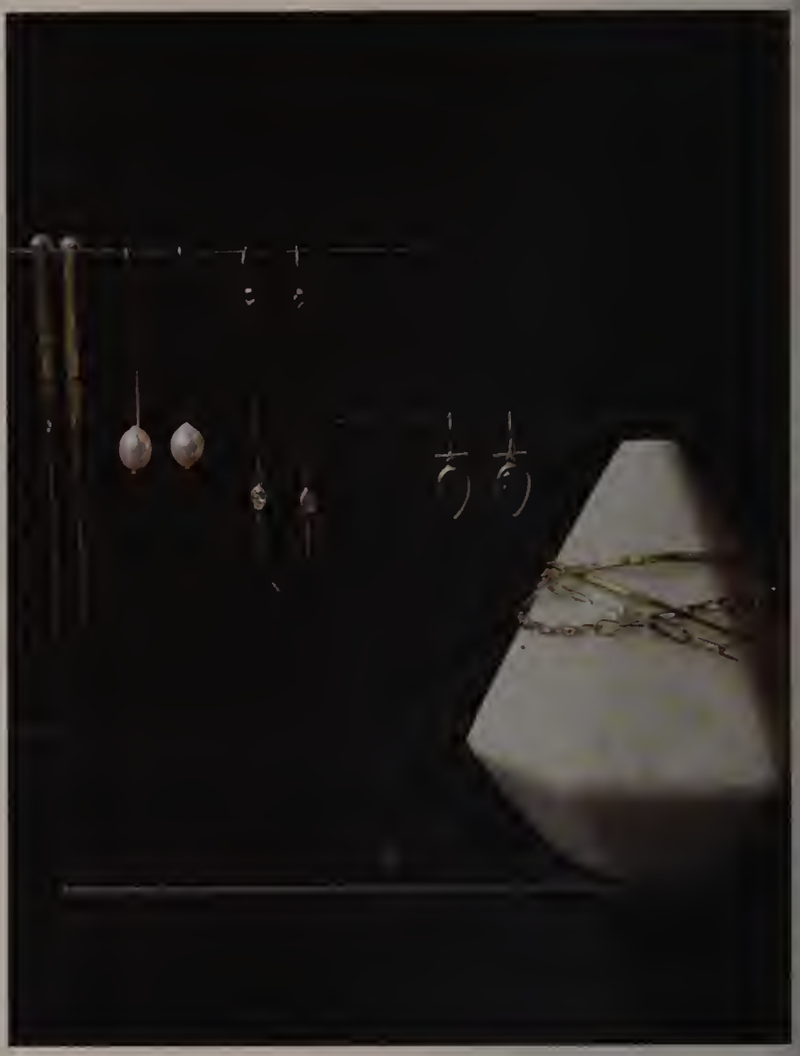

Table & Tulip

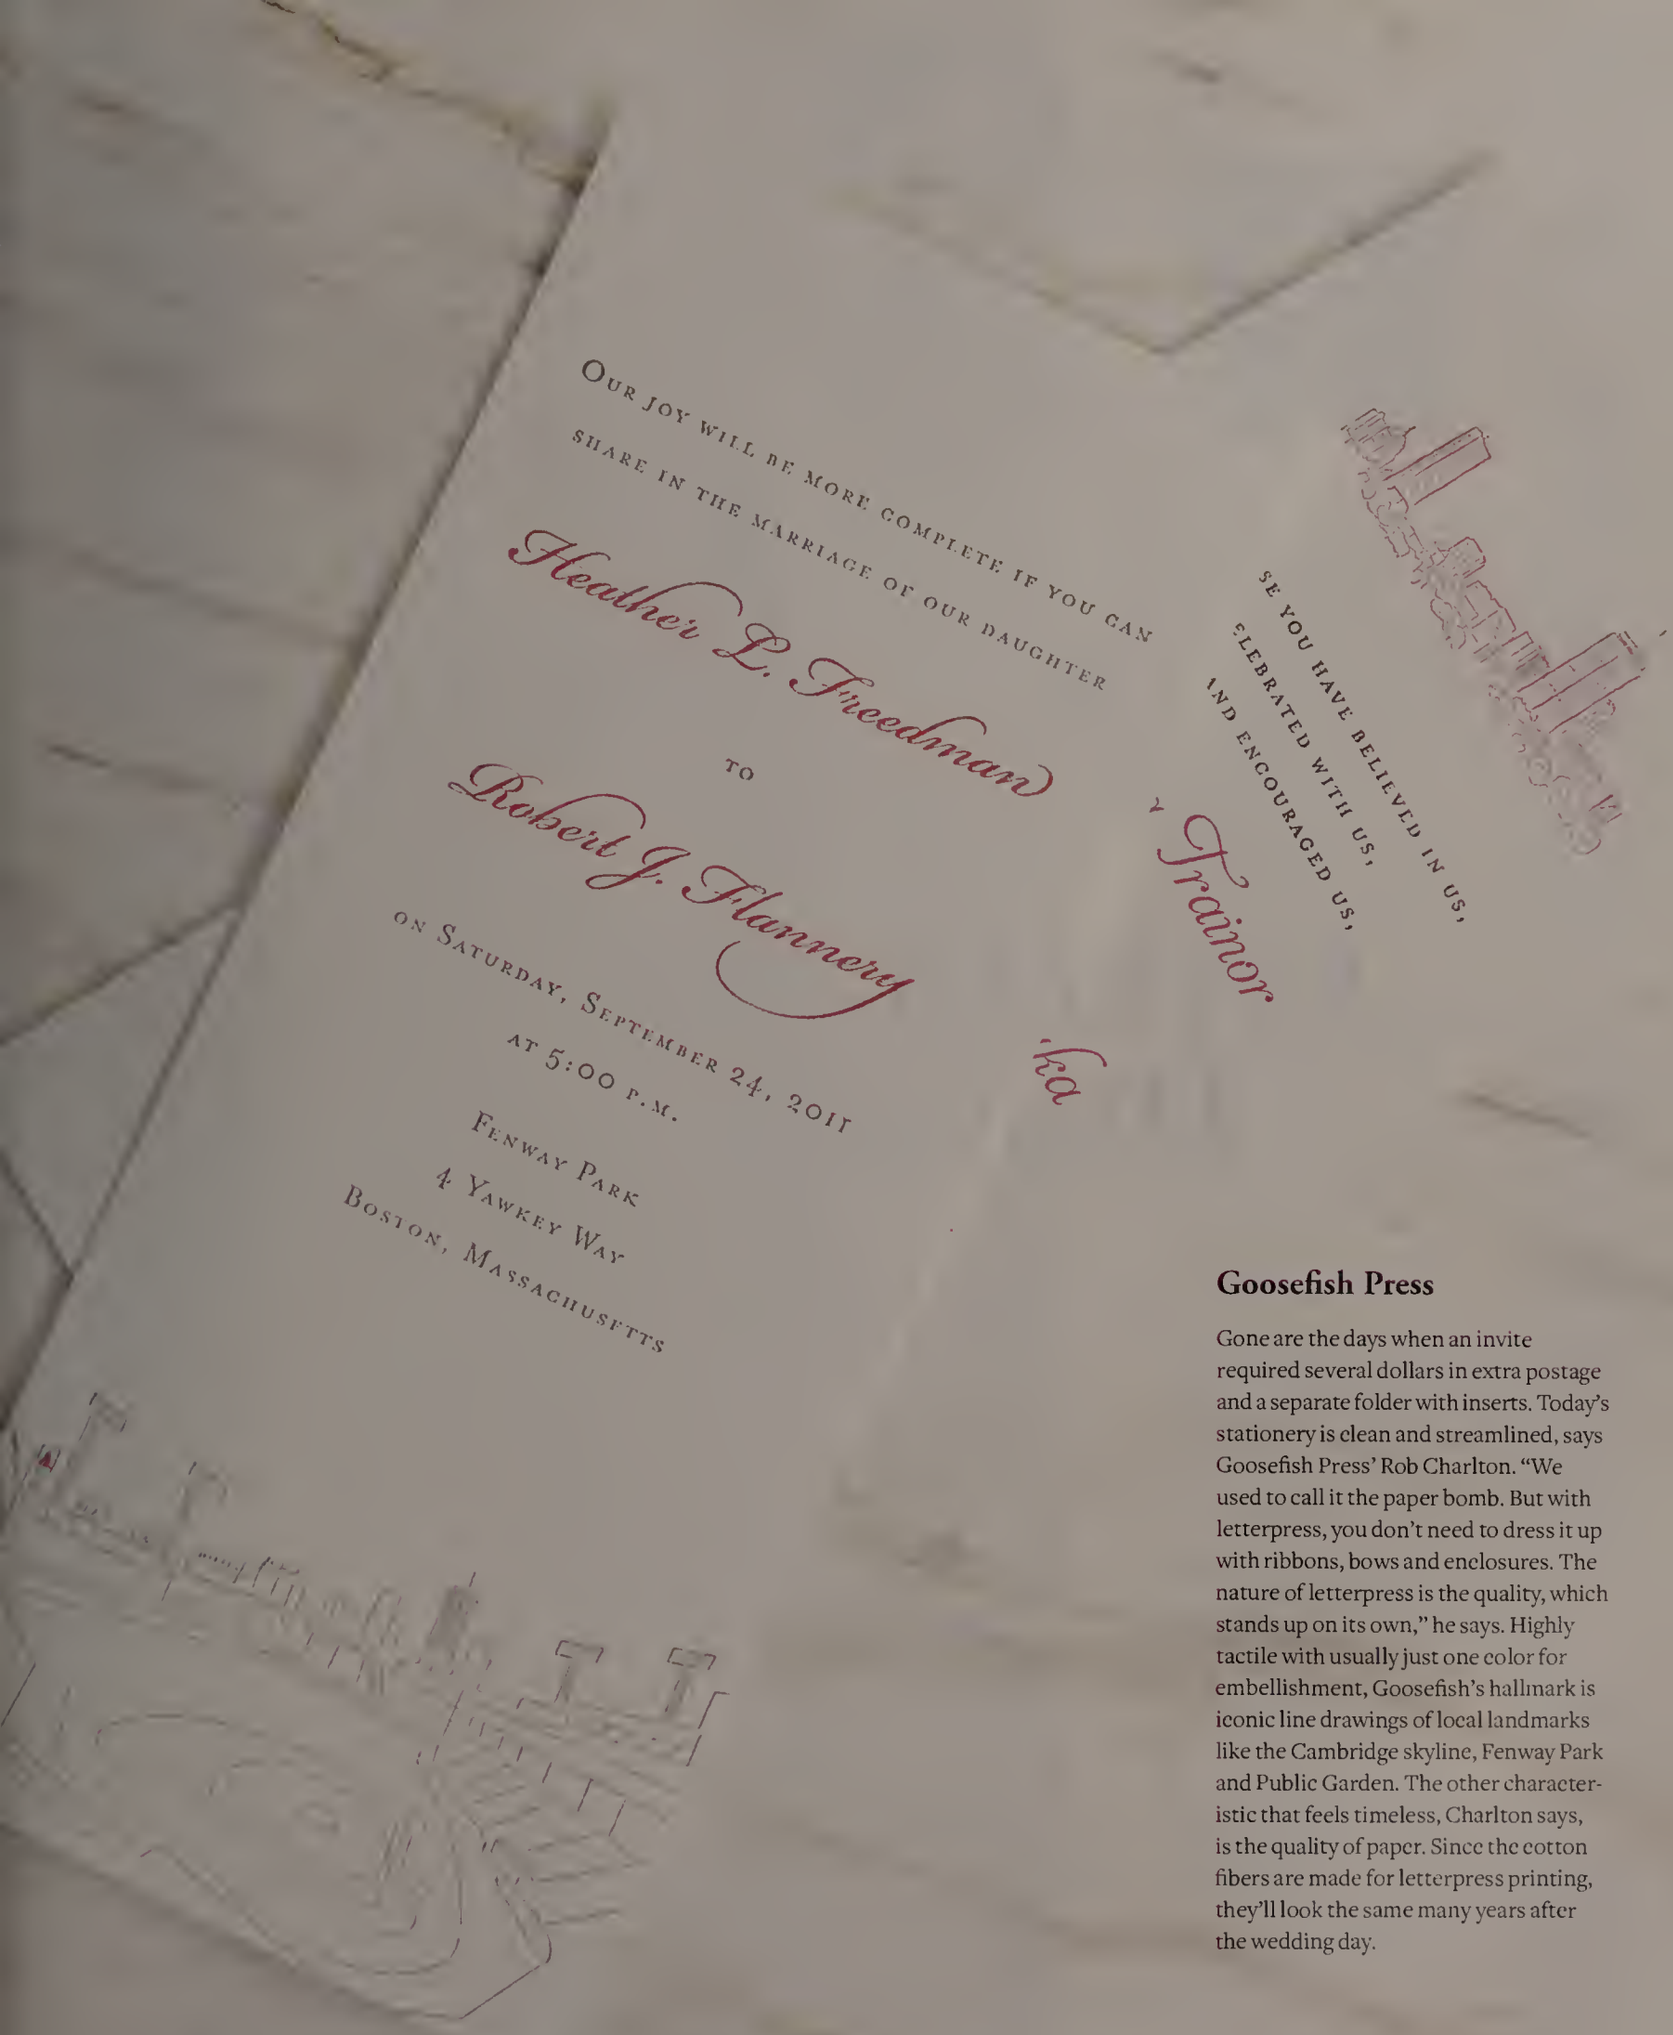
Lynnae Terrill compares the move toward textural fresh greens and lush, lighter-hued blossoms to a watercolor—not entirely surprising from someone with an art history degree. "Today's feel is more classic and timeless. It's a composition that five or 10 years from now won't be something where you can say, 'Oh, that was the flower of 1995,' " the event coordinator says. "There are always trend moments, but right now we're trending toward subtlety. It's now a watercolor, versus pops of color." Enter foliage and ferns for a fresh, outdoorsy feel no matter the season or venue. Towering flower centerpieces are being replaced by greens, a moderate number of blossoms and what Terrill calls a "combination of maximalist and minimalist"—delicate glass bottles of various shapes and sizes, often arranged with candles. Says Terrill, "Candles aren't only romantic and timeless but they also create a glow that's helpful because a lot of the venues around town have dark wood paneling."



Sophie Hughes

Sophie Hughes doesn't wear her own engagement ring every day. The jewelry designer is working with her hands all day and can't deal with the raised setting from the '70s. "It's a beautiful family piece, but it's really tall and it will spin to the side and get uncomfortable," Hughes says. "I often think about what I'd make if I made my own engagement ring, and it would be a bezel setting—nice and low." That practical-yet-classic design, lower-set without prongs, is just what many of her engaged couples are requesting these days, especially those working in Boston's medical field.

Hughes says people come to her because they value the form and function of her pieces, which use recycled precious metals and antique reclaimed gems. "It's very generational to have something personalized, and 'dainty' is something we see a lot as a request," Hughes says. "I love it, but as a jeweler it's a challenge to make sure engagement rings are durable and wearable day in and out because you have to protect everything balance-wise with a center stone."

Goosefish Press

Gone are the days when an invite required several dollars in extra postage and a separate folder with inserts. Today's stationery is clean and streamlined, says Goosefish Press' Rob Charlton. "We used to call it the paper bomb. But with letterpress, you don't need to dress it up with ribbons, bows and enclosures. The nature of letterpress is the quality, which stands up on its own," he says. Highly tactile with usually just one color for embellishment, Goosefish's hallmark is iconic line drawings of local landmarks like the Cambridge skyline, Fenway Park and Public Garden. The other characteristic that feels timeless, Charlton says, is the quality of paper. Since the cotton fibers are made for letterpress printing, they'll look the same many years after the wedding day.

STITCHING TOGETHER TIPS, TRENDS AND SECRETS FROM BRIDAL DESIGNERS

By The Improper Staff

LUKE AARON

Luke Aaron went from Boston to Broadway and back again. The Tufts grad stitches ready-to-wear and bespoke gowns at his Beacon Hill shop, and the self-described modern romantic says he finds a lot of different factors influence his style: "I'm inspired by history, nature and fine art, interpreted with a modern edge."

WHAT TRENDS ARE YOU MOST EXCITED ABOUT? Nontraditional silhouettes and colors. Brides want to express their unique fashion sense rather than choose the expected formal gown.

WHAT'S YOUR MOST MEMORABLE COMMISSION? We did three gowns for the same client to carry her through the rehearsal dinner, wedding day and brunch the next morning. We got to do three very different silhouettes, from highly structured and formal to a more fluid, bohemian look. The different dresses spoke to the location and color palette of each event.

ANY TIPS FOR A BRIDE BEGINNING HER SEARCH? Keep your everyday personal style in mind. If you dislike wearing rigid, tight clothing, you probably won't want to be stuck in an extremely structured, fitted gown on your wedding day.

WHAT'S THE MOST INTERESTING FEATURE YOU'VE SEEN AT A WEDDING YOU'VE ATTENDED? One couple held their reception at the zoo and had various animals brought out to meet the guests throughout the evening.

DO YOU EVER THINK ABOUT WHAT YOU'D WEAR TO YOUR OWN WEDDING? No. I would most likely be too focused on the playlist for the party and end up digging out an old blazer from my closet the night before—the same blazer I wear to every event.

DAVID JOSEF

Tapping into lush fabrics and ultra-feminine silhouettes, gown guru David Josef has been designing custom dresses for more than 40 years. He tries to add a feminine touch to every one of his creations, often incorporating a mix of textures. "The most interesting part of every wedding gown is the fabric combinations," Josef says. "I love mixing lace and tulle."

WHAT TRENDS ARE YOU MOST EXCITED ABOUT? The death of the strapless. I adore sleeves, necklines, appliqué shoulders with button backs.

WHAT DID YOU WEAR FOR YOUR OWN WEDDING? My husband Daniel Forrester and I got married on our 33rd anniversary. We were adorable. [We] both wore blue sports jackets and navy trousers. ... If I could change anything, I would have spent more time shopping for my pants—my damn pants were so tight I could barely get up the stairs.

WHAT'S YOUR MOST MEMORABLE COMMISSION? Jennifer Schmitt. After an initial search for laces, Jennifer told me that her fiance was Steve Belichick. I was kind of floored. What an honor for a designer, but what a hard dress to make. We waited till very close to the wedding for final fittings because Jennifer's body kept changing from breastfeeding, running, being a professional lacrosse player with the Boston Storm. She was the definition of elegance, beauty, femininity and total hotness.

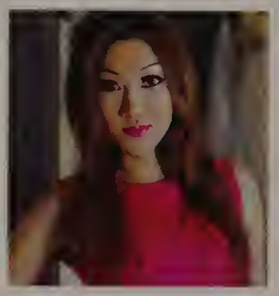
ANY TIPS FOR A BRIDE BEGINNING HER SEARCH? Think of the pictures in 10 years. No one wants to look back and wonder what the hell they were thinking. Do not go trendy; stay refined and elegant. There's nothing more horrific than looking back at those 1980s puffy sleeves.

FIRAS YOUSIF

Designer and boutique owner Firas Yousif is always after the classic bridal look, using European fabrics and laces to stitch together a timeless gown. But he's not above catering to a client's whimsical request, even sewing a small piece of a childhood blanket into the hem of one gown. "My designs are classic yet unique with modern elements," he says.

WHAT'S THE MOST INTERESTING FEATURE OF A WEDDING? The bride and her gown. There is nothing more exciting than to see all of the work that goes into making a custom gown come to life on that bride. Aside from achieving the perfect fit, the final gown always mirrors a bride's personality.

WHAT TRENDS ARE YOU MOST EXCITED ABOUT? I am mostly excited about blush, even if there are just subtle touches.



WHAT TREND DO YOU HOPE NEVER GOES OUT OF STYLE? Classic elegance, with a twist of modern embellishments that reflect current fashion trends.

ANY TIPS FOR A BRIDE BEGINNING HER SEARCH? Listen to the professionals that she is working with, regardless of her expectations as to which gowns she should be wearing.

CANDICE WU

While she's always eager to add custom beading or embellishments to her high-end dresses, fashion designer Candice Wu has a grander theme in mind when creating a bridal gown. "[It's about] incorporating elements of fantasy and glamour that make the bride look and feel like a princess," she says.

WHAT TRENDS ARE YOU MOST EXCITED ABOUT? The dramatic combination of black and white for bridal gowns.

WHAT TREND DO YOU HOPE NEVER GOES OUT OF STYLE? Princess and ballgown wedding dresses.

WHAT'S YOUR MOST MEMORABLE COMMISSION? The wedding dress for my first client. Her grandmother had sadly passed away before her wedding, and she wanted to incorporate her grandmother's necklace into the detail on the back of her dress.

ANY TIPS FOR A BRIDE BEGINNING HER SEARCH? She should stay true to her personal style throughout—for the dress, wedding location and theme.

WHAT'S THE MOST INTERESTING FEATURE YOU'VE SEEN AT A WEDDING YOU'VE ATTENDED? At a Korean wedding I attended, the bride put a red dot on her cheeks to repel evil.

FRIGHT NIGHT The dead are back and bloodier than ever for a 12-hour Halloween Horror Marathon. On Oct. 28, prepare for spurting blood and piercing screams as director George Romero's 1968 timeless horror, Night of the Living Dead, crawls on screen at 11:59 pm. Then, watch in terror as a group of escapees from an epidemic on the Eastern seaboard work together to fend off flesh-hungry zombies that surround their farmhouse refuge. And if this doesn't fully satisfy your appetite, the scare-a-thon continues with Lucio Fulci's Zombie, the 1979 gore fest that takes place on a tropical island plagued with ravenous flesh-eaters. But the scares don't stop there—four more films, which won't be announced until they hit the screen, finish the frightful night. If you dare, face monsters, ghosts and more, all on 35mm film, at Coolidge Corner Theatre on Oct. 28. / Hannah McKennett

Reviews by Brett Michel

Battle of the Sexes ★★★ Bless those in Hollywood who are dodging the digital revolution and opting to shoot their movies on celluloid. In the case of married filmmakers Jonathan Dayton and Valerie Faris (co-directors of 2006's Little Miss Sunshine and 2012's Ruby Sparks), their use of 35mm and 16mm film stocks to capture the 1973 setting of their latest project lends the comedic drama an air of authenticity that's missing from recent period pictures. But it's not simply the naturalistic lighting and '70s-styled framing courtesy of Linus Sandgren, the Oscar-winning cinematographer of last year's La La Land. It's also the costuming, hairstyling and production design that help make Battle of the Sexes feel like it could have actually been produced in 1973. And in commanding star turns, Emma Stone (another Oscar winner for La La Land) and Steve Carell (an Oscar nominee for 2014's Foxcatcher) do a tremendous job of inhabiting the skins of tennis players Billie Jean King and Bobby Riggs. Despite the film's appeal as an old-fashioned crowd-pleaser, the script by Simon Beaufoy (Oscar-winning writer of 2008's Slumdog Millionaire) makes the widely televised showdown between the 29-year-old female champ and the 55-year-old serial hustler and self-professed male chauvinist feel amazingly contemporary in the age of Trump. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Brad's Status ★★★1/2 In 2013, Ben Stiller directed and starred in an adaptation of James Thurber's short story, The Secret Life of Walter Mitty, and the film almost completely missed the point of the American humorist's most famous tale. That flop veered away from Thurber's vivid text, which originally appeared in the pages of The New Yorker in 1939 and dealt with a hapless daydreamer and his imagined flights of fancy. Leave it to writer/director Mike White—the talented screenwriter of 2003's School of Rock—to direct Stiller in the Mitty movie that should have been made. Stiller plays Brad Sloan, a 47-year-old who experiences a mild midlife crisis while accompanying his disaffected son Troy (Austin Abrams) to scout colleges in Boston. The nonprofit founder spends most of the trip mentally comparing himself to his old college buddies (Michael Sheen, Luke Wilson, Jemaine Clement and White), daydreaming about how much better his life might be in their shoes. Having already penned director Miguel Arteta's Beatriz at Dinner, White is enjoying one hell of a year. In the director's chair for the second time in his film career, he shows a much steadier hand with this archly comic drama than he did with 2007's Year of the Dog, pulling a remarkably restrained performance out of Stiller. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Florida Project ★★★★ You can get a good sense of Sean Baker's intentions by looking at the "special thanks" contained in the credits of the filmmaker's latest treasure of neorealism. Casting is key in Baker's films—see 2015's Tangerine, a feature he shot with an iPhone—so it's no wonder he's extended a debt of gratitude to George "Spanky" McFarland, child star of the Depression-era's Our Gang shorts, and Hal Roach, the producer who discovered him. With 7-year-old first-time actress Brooklynn Prince, Baker has struck gold. This little rascal plays Moonee, a rambunctious latch-key kid who spends her days getting into—and talking her way out of—trouble among the underclass of Orlando, the motel dwellers who live in the shadow of Disney's Magic Kingdom, a place where few of them can afford to visit. True to the Our Gang influence, Baker and co-writer Chris Bergoch have surrounded Prince with a couple of other talented novices as her pals, Christopher Rivera as Scooty and Valeria Cotto as Jancey, a new friend who's introduced while spitting on her mother's car. A big kid herself, Moonee's heavily tattooed young mom, Halley (Instagram personality and another real find, 24-year-old Brooklynite Bria Vinaite) is in way over her head. And then there's the motel's manager, Bobby (lone old pro Willem Dafoe), who runs the property like a grumpy but loving grandpa; a nonjudging surrogate for Baker himself, Bobby's the glue that binds these misfits together. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Goodbye Christopher Robin ★★ Coming on the heels of 2011's My Week with Marilyn and 2015's Woman in Gold, British director Simon Curtis dips his toes into another historical drama. But Goodbye Christopher Robin, his glimpse into the relationship between Winnie-the-Pooh author A. A. Milne (Ex Machina's Domhnall Gleeson) and his 8-year-old son Christopher Robin (newcomer Will Tilston), treads more closely in the footsteps of 2004's Finding Neverland, the fictionalized look at writer J.M. Barrie's friendship with the family that inspired him to pen Peter Pan. In other words, it's a mechanically maudlin mess. The plodding script by Frank Cottrell Boyce and Simon Vaughan does little to help, leaning as hard as it does on sentimental pablum. Almost as bad is the atypically overbearing score by Carter Burwell, who clearly realized the film wasn't successfully pulling the heartstrings on its own, so he laid the saccharine music on thick. The resulting treacle is like the aural equivalent of molasses. In spite of it all, the actors turn in some good work. Tilston's smile lights up the screen as much as Gleeson's turn as Milne darkens it after the World War I veteran suffers through periodic bouts of post-traumatic stress disorder. And as Christopher's mother, Margot Robbie displays a fiercely stiff upper lip while jealously chastising Christopher's far more maternal live-in nanny, Olive. As played by Boardwalk Empire's Kelly Macdonald, Olive's scenes with her young charge offer some of the film's few authentic emotions. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Kingsman: The Golden Circle ★1/2 Matthew Vaughn's wildly entertaining homage to 1970s-era James Bond, 2014's Kingsman: The Secret Service, was the most delectable iteration of the 007 formula since 2006's Casino Royale, the franchise's first with Daniel Craig. Loosely based on a comic book series and set in the present, it was an affectionately winking, post-modern take on the spy genre, with Oscar winner Colin Firth tapping into his inner Roger Moore as gentleman spy Harry Hart. Subverting the Bond template even further, Vaughn's sequel finds Hart's protege, Gary "Eggsy" Unwin (Taron Egerton), living with Tilde (Hanna Alström), the Swedish princess he rescued and bedded during the first film's climax, rather than turning her into a disposable fling like the bulk of Bond's more casual conquests. The first film's theme of two worlds colliding—served by the dapper spy who trained the street tough in the art of combat and the artistry of tying a Windsor knot—has been recycled with the introduction of the Statesmen, the Kingsmen's cowpoke American counterparts (played by Channing Tatum, Pedro Pascal, Halle Berry and Jeff Bridges). Eggsy enlists their aid after the Savile Row tailor shop that serves as the independent British Secret Service's front is blown off the map. But sadly, the stellar cast can't save the unexpectedly tedious film (Elton John's cameo is funny the first time, not so much the fifth), while Julianne Moore's strangely sedate turn as a Martha Stewart-type-turned-wrong is no match for Samuel L. Jackson's scenery-chewing villain in the original picture. A disappointment. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Meyerowitz Stories (New and Selected) ★★★1/2 Do you miss the Woody Allen films of old? Wish he still made classics like Annie Hall and Manhattan, his best-known hits from the '70s, back before his personal life began making more headlines than his movies? Well, writer Noah Baumbach might be the answer to your cinema-seeking prayers. While certainly not a household name like Allen, the talented writer/director's been making movies for more than 20 years. But it's been during the past decade, around the time he made 2005's comedic divorce drama, The Squid and the Whale, that his films started to quietly position Baumbach as the heir apparent to one of his clearest influences. And while his latest might come the closest to being an homage to Allen, it still retains Baumbach's own voice. It showcases a wonderfully nebbishy performance by 80-year-old Oscar-winner Dustin Hoffman as gray-maned and thickly bearded patriarch Harold Meyerowitz, a failed artist who firmly believes he's an unrecognized artist. This, of course, has placed a heavy burden on his three adult children, each the product of different relationships. Ben Stiller, who starred in 2010's Greenberg and 2014's While We're Young for Baumbach, does fine work as the youngest son, Matthew, but it's Adam Sandler who turns in surprisingly great work as Matthew's half brother, Danny. The two gather around their dad with their awkward half sister Jean (Elizabeth Marvel of Homeland) in this novelistically episodic and richly mature, if relatively minor, gem. (At Kendall Square and streaming on Netflix.)

Professor Marston and the Wonder Women ★★★ If you're one of the many people who enjoyed this past summer's breakout surprise, Wonder Woman, then you'll likely be absolutely fascinated by writer/director Angela Robinson's stranger-than-fiction, R-rated origin tale of William Moulton Marston (The Fate of the Furious' Luke Evans), the ousted Harvard psychologist and little-known inventor of the polygraph. Better known as the creator of the comic book adventures of the Amazon Princess, he did manage to sneak his lie detector into his more famous creation in the form of Diana Prince's Lasso of Truth, which got him into hot water with '40s-era decency leagues for his comics' overt bondage imagery and "sexual perversity." If only they knew what was going on in Marston's home. Robinson, who's been toiling in television for the past decade while directing episodes of The L Word and True Blood, makes a handsome return to the big screen (Portlandia cinematographer Bryce Fortner bathes the film's Lowell locations in a warm golden hue) after an inauspicious start directing pictures such as Herbie Fully Loaded. She employs the Hollywood style of a bygone era, rich in period detail and fashion, to normalize the true story of Marston's secretive polyamorous romance with his two muses, live-in loves and mothers to his children, wife Elizabeth Marston (The Gift's Rebecca Hall) and their lover, Olive Byrne (Fifty Shades Darker's Bella Heathcote). BDSM has never seemed so mainstream—but be sure to leave your young Wonder Woman fans at home. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Stronger ★★★1/2 Last Christmas, in his grossly exploitative vanity project Patriots Day, Dorchester-born actor/producer Mark Wahlberg cast himself as the hero of 2013's horrific Boston Marathon bombing. Wahlberg's completely fictional Sgt. Tommy Saunders was present for every big moment—from witnessing the blasts at the finish line to discovering Dzhokhar Tsarnaev hiding inside a boat in a Watertown backyard. Hell, even David Ortiz stopped to shake Wahlberg's hand at Fenway Park just before the slugger delivered his iconic "This is our fucking city" speech. It is our fucking city, and we deserved a hell of a lot better than Wahlberg's tasteless cash-in on a tragedy. And now we have it. Director David Gordon Green's Stronger, which has been adapted from bombing survivor Jeff Bauman's memoir, could have easily become a hagiography. However, John Pollono's intimate, character-driven script wisely presents Bauman (Jake Gyllenhaal) as a deeply flawed young man who's wildly uncomfortable with the heroic spotlight that's been shone on him by the media and public. And unlike Patriots Day, Stronger doesn't focus on the bombing. Rather, it's the random event that sets the man-child on a journey toward recovery: Gradually learning to walk on artificial limbs after losing both legs, he also takes his first steps toward growing up—and Gyllenhaal's tremendous performance allows you to follow along during each pivotal step. And as strong as Gyllenhaal's work is, the acting by Orphan Black star Tatiana Maslany as Bauman's on-again, off-again girlfriend Erin is, well, stronger. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Victoria & Abdul ★★1/2 Dame Judi Dench is poised to do what few Oscar-nominated actors have done before, standing to be nominated for playing the same character twice, while joining a select group that includes Cate Blanchett, Bing Crosby, Paul Newman, Peter O'Toole, Al Pacino and Sylvester Stallone. In the latest historical drama from Stephen Frears (director of 2006's The Queen, 2013's Philomena and last year's Florence Foster Jenkins), Dench dons the starchy dresses of Queen Victoria, 20 years after playing the role in director John Madden's Mrs. Brown. The 1997 dramatization centers on the Queen's relationship with John Brown, a Scottish member of her household staff who offered comfort after the death of her husband with a forbidden friendship that threatened to create a scandal in the tight-knit monarchy. Looked at from a certain angle, Frears' Victoria & Abdul is sort of a genteel sequel to—if not an outright remake of—Madden's arthouse hit, with its little-known story of the close bond the older Queen formed with Abdul Karim (Furious 7's Ali Fazal), a young Indian servant chosen to deliver a coin to her from overseas, in a film that begins as farce before detouring into tragedy. It's all very familiar, and like the current royal family, it doesn't have a strong purpose—outside of the typically award-worthy work that Dench commits to the screen. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

IT TAKES TWO Tina and Amy. Oprah and Gayle. Abbi and Ilana. You can add Hana and JJ to that list. When the best friend duo that makes up Overcoats met in college, their connection was as harmonious as their sound: folksy yet electronic and set against a soulful backdrop. The pair transitions from soft and clear opening notes to a high-energy dance party, but what is consistent across their debut album, Young, is the vulnerability in their lilting harmonies. And, much like their friendship, it's almost impossible to separate one voice from the other. See your newest friend crushes when Overcoats plays Brighton Music Hall on Oct. 19. / Brenna Donovan

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Julia Aparicio

AROUND THE BEND Expectations are remolded with the Fuller Craft Museum's latest exhibition, Gender Bend: Women in Wood, Men at the Loom, which weaves its way open on Oct. 21. The multimedia show gives space to artists traditionally underrepresented in their craft by featuring work by female wood turners and male weavers, including retired doctor turned tapestry artist Klaus Anselm's "New York New York," a woven tribute to the glow and geometry of America's most populous city. Bend your perceptions at the Fuller Craft Museum through March 11. / Hannah McKennett

LOCATION, LOCATION, LOCATION

It was a Leonard Bernstein love fest when the Boston Symphony Orchestra kicked off its 137th season with the Opening Night Gala that featured a concert of the Boston-bred composer's works to mark the centennial celebration of his birth.

The soiree began with cocktails and little nibbly things, continued with the concert—led by maestro Andris Nelsons and featuring famed mezzo-soprano Frederica von Stade and soprano Julia Bullock—and concluded with an elegant dinner of dishes inspired by Bernstein's favorites, served at tables decorated with Bernstein-related images from the BSO's archives.

Front and center: co-chairs Suki and Miguel de Bragança and Lynn Dale and Frank Wisneski, silver fox Susan Paine, uber arts patrons Cindy and Oliver Curme, the delightful Roberta Cohn, blond bombshell Karen Bressler and her handsome husband, Scott Epstcin, the beautiful and bewitching Susan Kaplan, ubiquitous hipsters Linda and Dan Waintrup, stalwart symphony supporters Paul and Katie Buttenwieser, stylish intellectuals Marjorie Arons-Barron and James Barron, and one person at dinner who noted that the wine wasn't "the usual plonk you get at these things; it's actually quite good!"

In fact, everything was.

The following exchange was overheard: "I love Leonard Bern-STEEN."

"It's Bern-STEIN."

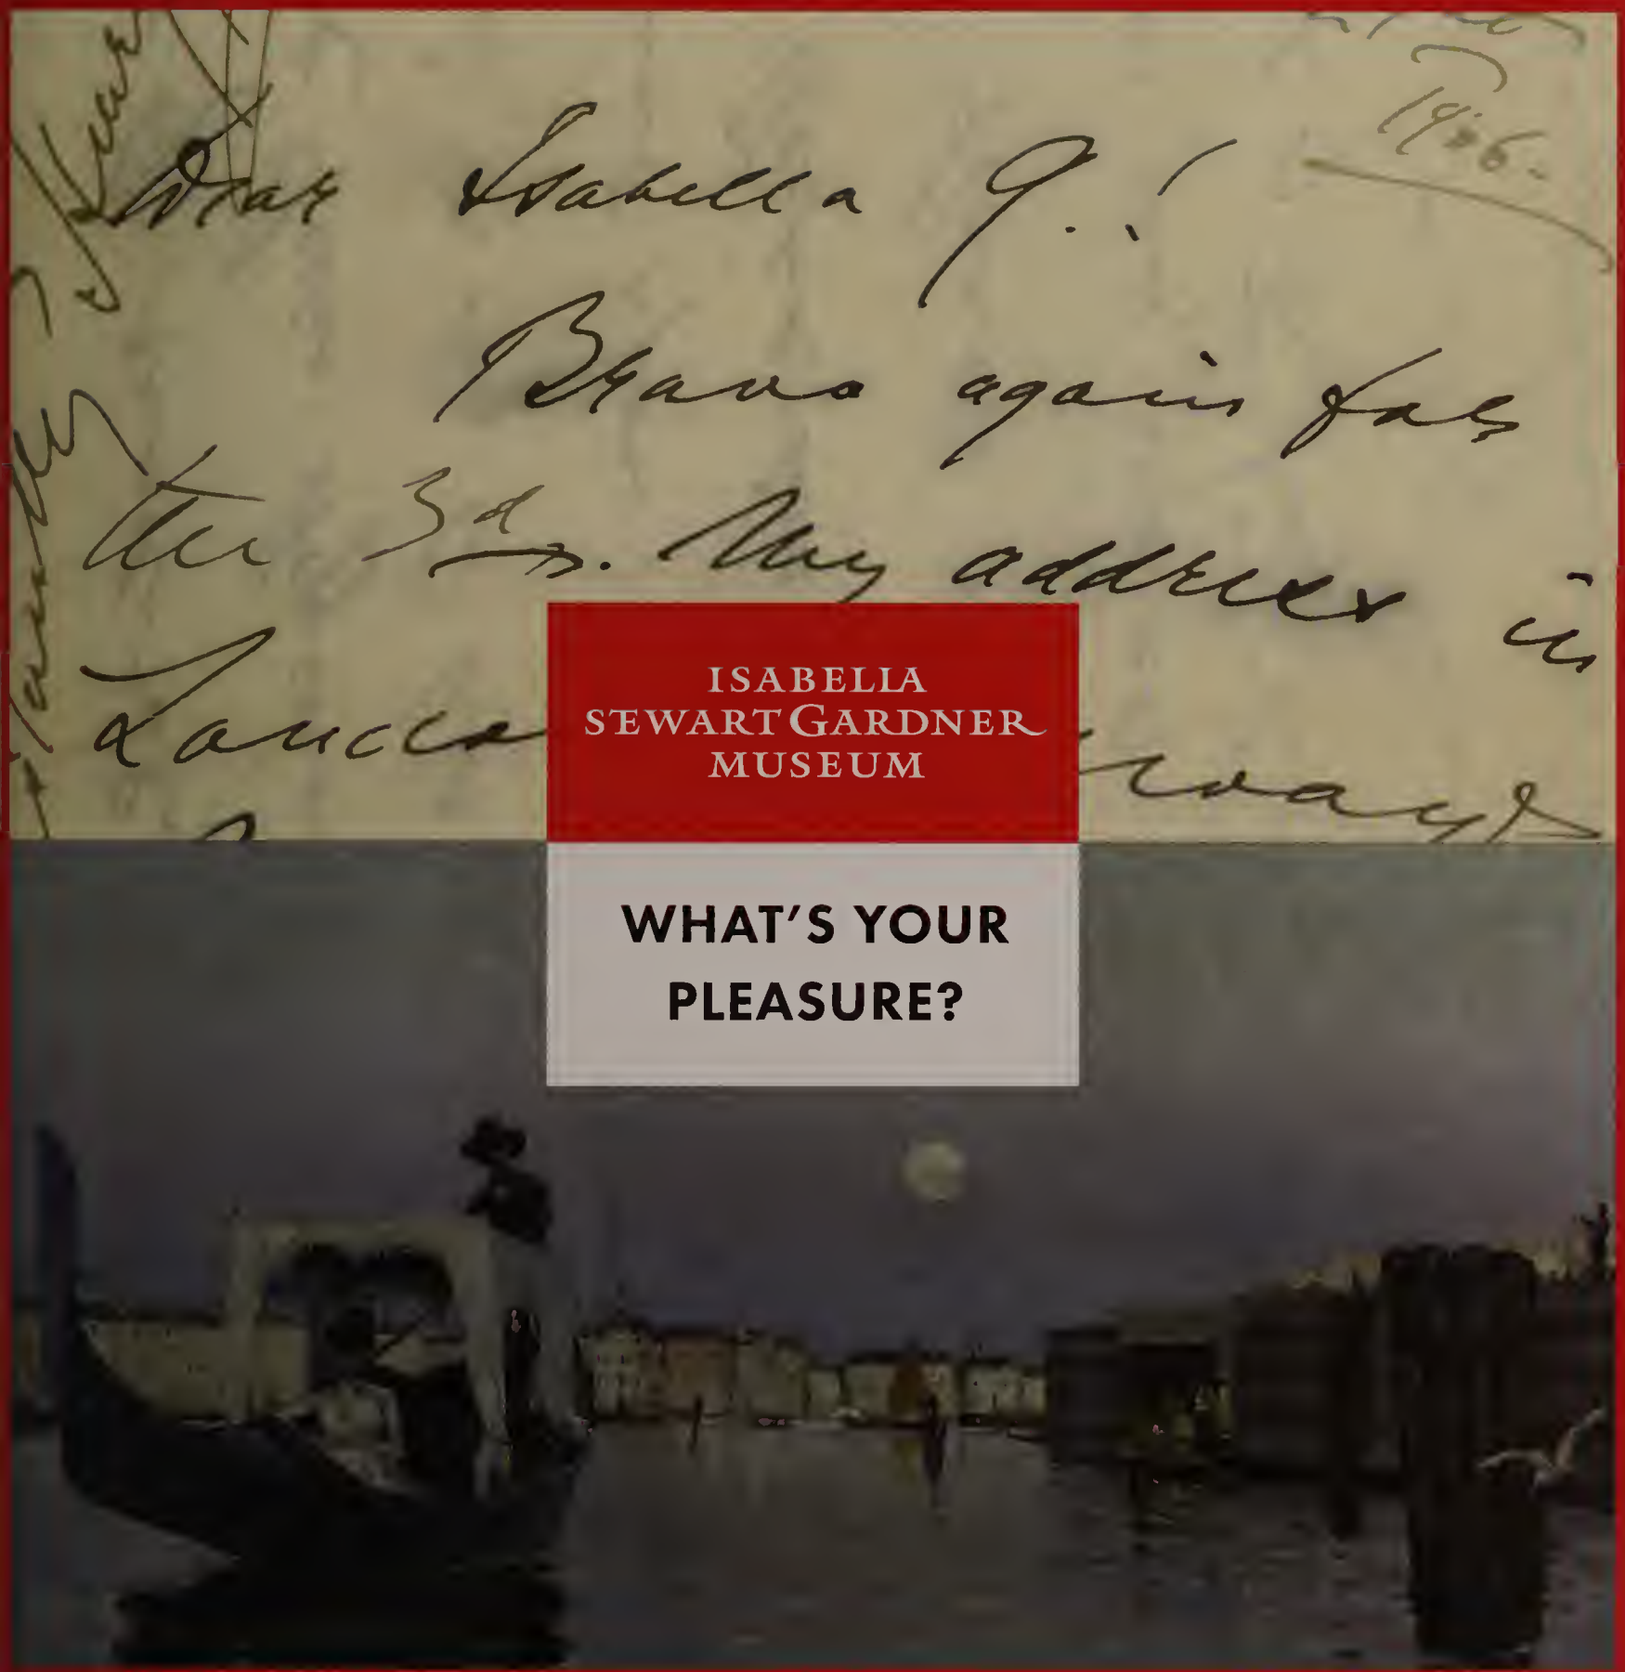
"Oh, whatever. Iceberg, Goldberg."

However, the evening's most amusing remark came from the person who observed, "West Side Story might've been the Sharks vs. the Jets in the 1950s, but these days, it's your average Joes vs. real estate agents who want 3 million bucks for a broom closet.'"

A MARVELOUS NIGHT FOR IT

The Esplanade is a hotbed of hotties working out on any given day, but at the Moondance Gala—a black-tie benefit for the Esplanade Association—the only strength training going on was lots of cocktail curls, while the aerobic exercise came from getting sweaty on the dance floor (unless you count yours truly trying to shoehorn into my tuxedo after a summer of overindulgence).

The cocktail hour threatened to stretch into two as volunteers gamely tried to corral the crowd into the dining tent, which was decorated with gigantic moss-covered chandeliers and long white tables.



Prominent among the prominent throng: co-chairs Lori and Matthew Sidman and Jean and Christopher Egan, the naturally carbonated Jennifer Poveromo and her delightful mother, Deborah McIntire, the devastatingly handsome David Chen and Peter Crosby, Beacon Hillions Yvette and Peter Mulderry, the absurdly gorgeous Nicole Conlon and her charming other half, Michael, dashing reprobate David Fialkow with the ridiculously gorgeous Nina, blond bombshell Kristin Casey and the debonair Joe, salty dog Jonathan Bingham and the flawless Lily, the swan-like Stephanie Warburg and her distinguished main man, Jonathan, noted photographer Tess Atkinson, white-hot floral designer Marc Hall, the incorrigible Cheryl Franklin, equestrienne extraordinaire Beth Johnson, Nantucket nabobs Kate Lubin and Glendon Sutton, designer to the stars Eric Roseff and his real estate mogul husband, Colin Sullivan, blue-blooded do-gooder Julie Hume Gordon (looking spectacular in a canary yellow evening gown), Our Lady of Chanel, Mary Nobile-King, fanatical football fan Linda Tedder, fashionista Daniela Corte and the super-suave Stuart Roseman. The auction raised an enormous amount of money to keep the Esplanade looking spiffy, and the party got an infusion of new energy as younger guests arrived for the dance party.

The evening's best exchange:

"It's starting to get darker earlier."

"Good. That means I can go to bed sooner." ◆

GET WELL, GORDON

GORDON HAYWARD WAS STILL WAITING FOR HIS "WELCOME to Boston" moment. Sure, he had his fair share of introductions to the city during the past year. The first was on Jan. 3—long before he chose to suit up for the Celtics. His Utah Jazz were playing at TD Garden, where Boston fans started cheering for the free-agent-to-be. It was a moment that stuck with Hayward months later, when he chatted with The Improper for what was to be our cover story for this issue.

"I was definitely aware of it when we came here to play and the fans were cheering," Hayward recalled. "It's weird because you're playing in an opposing arena and they're cheering for you. I didn't know I'd be playing next year for them."

Hayward got plenty of warm welcomes when he toured Boston during his free-agency visit in July and again when he strolled through the North End after signing his $128 million contract. But the Celtics forward was primed to get his official "Welcome to Boston" on Oct. 18, when he would've been introduced in the Celtics starting lineup in front of the home crowd at the Garden. And he was slated to get a "Welcome to Boston" moment from The Improper as our cover boy, with an accompanying profile in this issue that touched on his move to the area. But in sports, the unexpected moment is right around the corner, and on Oct. 17, six minutes into the season-opening game in Cleveland, the 27-year-old landed awkwardly near the hoop, dislocating his ankle, snapping his leg and likely ending his season.

Hayward has been involved in plenty of unexpected moments in his career. Once it was a moment of ecstasy, like when the skinny, unheralded Midwestern kid teamed up with a young, upstart coach to take their college hoops team to within a half-court heave of an NCAA championship. And another time it was a feel-good moment, like when that same skinny, unheralded kid got better every year, turned into an NBA All-Star and teamed up with that same young, upstart coach, joining pro basketball's most storied franchise. But this most recent moment was a heart-wrenching one that shocked a national TV audience.

For now, Hayward will have to wait for his true "Welcome to Boston" moment. And we'll have to wait for our Hayward cover, as we changed plans in light of his injury—although the original design can be seen above. But when that welcoming moment eventually comes for Hayward after months of hard work and rehab, it's sure to be even sweeter and the crowd's cheers even louder. Get well, Gordon.

NEW KID ON THE BUTCHER BLOCK

A MEAT COMPANY HOPES ITS NEW SOUTH END STORE IS A CUT ABOVE

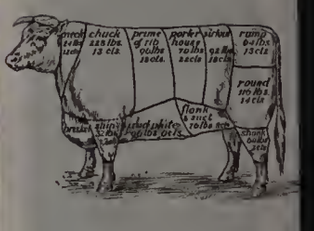
WALDEN LOCAL MEAT CO.
316 Shawmut Ave. Boston
waldenlocalmeat.com



When it came time for Charley Cummings and his wife Kristen to decide what to feed their family, they had plenty of options for seasonal, local organic produce and other goods. Meat, however, was a different beast. After years in the agriculture industry, Kristen knew many farmers raising livestock on responsible local farms, but what was missing was a supply chain linking them to people on the lookout for better quality meat. That is until 2014, when Charley founded Walden Local Meat Co., a meat-share company that's slated to open its South End brick-and-mortar in early November.

With Walden's service, customers receive monthly shipments of dry-aged cuts of meat that are delivered to their homes throughout Greater Boston and elsewhere in New England. The team sources 100-percent grass-fed beef and pasture-raised pork, lamb and poultry from small farms within a 250-mile radius of its Billerica distribution center. "We're choosing small industrious farmers over industrial factory farms," Charley says.

Now that philosophy will be on display at Walden's Shawmut Avenue location that boasts crisp white tile floors and gleaming refrigerated cases. Kristen has taken control of the shop along with head butcher Tommy Trainor, who recently joined Walden from Babbo Pizzeria. At less than 800 square-feet, Walden's first foray into retail space is more about sharing the brand's story and less about pushing gigantic volumes of product. But, of course, meat is the main dish, and shoppers won't find normal commodity products here. Adds Charley, "There's nothing normal about the way the industry raises meat." With whole animals butchered in-house, there's unusual cuts like beef oxtail and Denver-style lamb ribs as well as curated dry goods, spices, sauces and cookbooks.

Next on the menu, Walden will soon sell wine and craft beer in addition to offering butchering and cooking classes for home chefs who want to experiment with different cuts of meat to serve their families—without the side of guilt. "There's something really cool about coming together around a meal when you feel 100 percent about where it came from, what it's made of and the people who grew it," Charley says. / Nathan Tavares

PASS THE GRASS

With a few years of running Walden Local Meat Co. under his belt, Charley Cummings has gained an even keener appreciation for well-raised meat. He breaks down three of the biggest advantages of using grass-fed beef.

FAT
"The fat on a grass-fed animal is much lower in saturated fat."

FEEL
"A commodity product will leave a greasy feeling in your mouth long after you swallow it. Grass-fed beef has a cleaner finish."

FLAVOR
"From a flavor profile perspective, grass-fed beef has a more concentrated, beefier flavor. Our product is dry-aged as a whole carcass and that results in a much stronger concentration of flavor and much lower water content than in most industrial commodity products that are wet-aged, which leads to a really heavy iron taste."

EYE OF THE THAIGER

A RUSTIC THAI CONCEPT EARNS ITS STRIPES

CRYING THAIGER
114 Ferry St., Malden (781-480-1243)
cryingthaigerma.com

AS THE OWNER OF THE JUST-OPENED Crying Thaiger restaurant, Nisachon Thanangthirapong aims to bring authentic Thai cuisine to Malden. And that mission starts with the restaurant's name, which derives from a traditional Thai dish made with grilled beef brisket and a sauce so spicy that ancient folklore claims it once made a tiger break down in tears. Much like its signature dish, the rest of the menu showcases the bold flavors and spicy ingredients that are famous in Thai cooking.

"We want to introduce traditional flavors to our customers because most of the Thai restaurants in Massachusetts are very Americanized. The flavors tend to be a little more sweet and less spicy," Thanangthirapong says. "We pick flavors based on how authentic they are so that we are serving our food in a very real way."

With rustic wooden walls and an intimate dining room seating approximately 40 guests, every aspect of the space's decor—down to the tableware—reflects the restaurant's traditional Thai roots.

"Even the water cups we picked are very traditional Thai cups," she says. "Most of them were actually imported directly from Thailand, so that customers walk in and are like, 'Wow, I have never seen something like this before.' People find it very interesting."

The menu breaks down into several different categories; one page labeled "Recommended" features the restaurant's most traditional dishes, including panang curry with short ribs and crispy fish basil as well as some popular Thai street foods.

"We have some dishes, like the BBQ pork skewers, that are a traditional street food," Thanangthirapong says. "Thai people come in and are immediately like, 'Oh my god, I definitely need to have this,' because it makes them think of the old days."

Thanangthirapong points out all of the ingredients in each dish are as authentic as possible, no matter how difficult they are to source. That same approach is used in the kitchen's prep; each recipe is prepared in the traditional manner, even if it requires a little more time. Thanangthirapong believes this "no shortcuts" approach to preparing food will set the restaurant apart from competitors.

"We use a lot of ingredients that most Thai restaurants around here don't use, because they are so hard to find," she says. "The process to make really authentic Thai food is a little harder; it takes a little longer. We sort of think of that as the motto of this restaurant."

Good Eats: Stadium Eating

The Cheetos waffle and chicken sandwich at TD Garden's Frito Lay Test Kitchen is sure to raise questions. Such as, why would anyone add crushed Cheetos and jalapenos to waffle batter? But those questions are likely to vanish after the first bite. This riff on the classic chicken-and-waffle combo sandwiches a crispy chicken tender between fresh, hot waffles and drizzles the top with maple syrup. The taste is addictive and unfamiliar: savory, sweet and brightened by a jalapeno kick. "For a different take on fries, we serve a mix of Cheetos-flavored popcorn and Cheetos on the side," says concessions sous-chef Jeremy Karr. There's no graceful way to avoid maple-syrup fingers as you eat this dish, so grab some napkins and dig in. / Nathan Tavares

FUNNY BUSINESS. Brett Gelman [illegible]

MONSTER MASH

Comedian Brett Gelman is no stranger to monsters, from Adult Swim's Dinner with Brett Gelmon specials where he portrays a problematic version of himself to his turn as disgraced journalist Murray Bauman on the second season of Stronger Things. From Nov. 10 to Dec. 10, Gelman will take on a monster of a different kind: the titular character in the Huntington Theatre Company's production of Tartuffe. We checked in with him to discuss Molière and the Netflix phenomenon. / Julio Aporicio

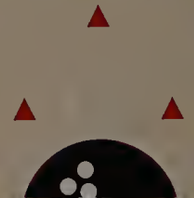
WHAT INSPIRED YOU TO ENTER THE WORLD OF COMEDY? I was 6 years old and I saw A Night at the Opera with the Marx Brothers, and that was it. I was hooked. I was completely hooked.

YOU'RE ABOUT TO PLAY THE LEAD IN THE CLASSIC COMEDY TARTUFFE. WHAT DREW YOU TO THE ROLE? I received training at North Carolina School of the Arts, and we studied all the classics. A big part of our curriculum was Molière, and this was my favorite play and one of my dream roles in theater. I love the character of Tartuffe because he is just such a hilarious monster. But also, he really is a reflection of a lot of dark things that are going on in the country right now.

WHAT WAS THE INSPIRATION BEHIND THE DINNER WITH BRETT GELMAN SPECIALS? The first one, Dinner with Friends with Brett Gelmon and Friends, was originally my co-writer and director Jason Woliner's idea. He had this idea of me doing a comedy special around his dinner table, and it developed into these three pieces that were sort of horror comedy. They were equally as horrifying and disturbing as they were funny. The first one was really based on how he and I felt at odd ends with people around us in the world and how we felt like monsters within that.

SPEAKING OF MONSTERS, THE SECOND SEASON OF STRANGER THINGS WAS JUST RELEASED. WHAT WAS IT LIKE JOINING A SHOW WITH SUCH A CULT FOLLOWING? It's a thrill. The Duffer brothers just have such an incredible vision of what the show should be. Everybody is really nice—you would never know that this was a hit show with how humble and down-to-earth every single person on it is. But everybody's very focused and intense about the work, and that's a combo I like. It's crazy. I haven't really processed that I'm on a show that's this huge. It's such a pop cultural phenomenon.



IF YOU COULD PLAY ANY OTHER CHARACTER ON STRANGER THINGS, WHO WOULD IT BE? [Laughs] I would be the Demogorgon.

Fear not, Boston bowlers. BEAU PEEP

Burgundy's standouts boast charm, brightness, supple fruit and moderate tannins, and the region's unusually warm, dry weather during summer 2015 resulted in what's being hyped as a "dream vintage" for Beaujolais. The best news: Even top Beaujolais from estates in the 10 cru villages remain reasonably priced. The challenge is that many have already disappeared, but if you can get your hands on these all-purpose red wines, they complement serious dishes and also nicely match casual fare. / Sandy Block

CHÂTEAU DE PIERREUX, BROUILLY, 2015

This classic, ripe, plummy Brouilly features floral, sweet herb aromas and black cherry fruit. Produced at an historic domaine by the dynamic and bicontinental Jean-Charles Boisset, the style straddles the line between pure sensuality and earthy terroir expression, and will age easily for another five years.

$19, Reservoir Wines and Spirits, Boston

DOMAINE DE LA VOÛTE DES CROZES, CÔTE-DE-BROUILLY, 2015

Lush, silky and very smooth, this wine is made at an estate that farms grapes on the granite slopes of Mont Brouilly. It's laden with red cherries and notes of almond, plus great balancing acidity. Medium-bodied and graceful, this is an ideal pairing with meaty fish dishes and will also keep for years in the bottle—but is too good now to resist drinking.

$23, Cambridge Wine & Spirits

JEAN-PAUL BRUN DES TERRES DORÉES, FLEURIE, 2015

This bottle is light and elegant, with a clean, fresh fruit character and minimal tannins. The aromas are more strawberry-like, with touches of dried herb, tobacco and violet, while the red berry flavors are accented with baking spice and a touch of anise. It can be served a little cooler than you might drink most red wines and complements salads and smoked fish.

$21, Concord Provisions

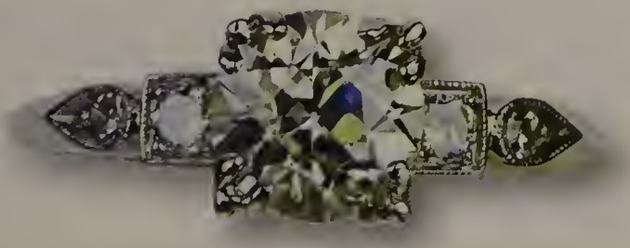
KNIT WITS

Winter is coming, but at least Bostonians can wrap themselves in chic hand-knit accessories. After five years in the biz and a pair of pop-ups at the Street at Chestnut Hill and Newbury Street, Third Piece is bringing its locally knit garb to a permanent location that's set to open in mid-November. Owner Kristen Lambert says visitors can get their hands on completed merchandise in addition to the line's patterns, signature Funky Chunky merino wool and a curated selection of other brands, like Peruvian alpaca fleece developed by the Rare Creatures and Wool and the Gang's upcycled T-shirt skeins from Balmain- and Alexander McQueen-bred designers. During the warmer months, Third Piece plans to introduce linen and cotton yarns, and roll out a thinner version of its in-house label.



Until then, knitters can hibernate in the South End spot, which is expected to host trunk shows, among other special events, and 90-minute to two-hour classes. "We've developed a four-part learn-to-knit program to get somebody from a true beginner to a more intermediate level," Lambert explains, adding that students create phone cases, headbands, hats and cowls during the project-driven sessions. Those with a little more expertise can get a helping hand too: "The knit bar is a go-to technical resource for people just to drop in or do a one-on-one private lesson," Lambert says, which means no more phoning a friend from the couch or trying to sift through the internet for answers. "I think people are looking for places to get outside and still feel connected to the people around them. That's what I hope the space really does." / Sarah Hagman

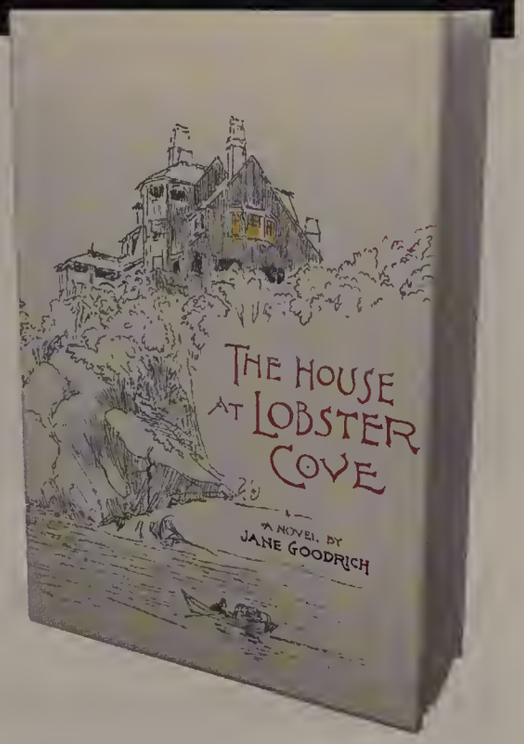
HOUSE OF SECRETS



A HISTORICAL NOVEL DEPICTS A WEALTHY AND RETICENT BOSTONIAN

The House at Lobster Cove* by Jane Goodrich
Published by Benna Books, 377 pages, $25

WITH ITS GRACEFUL AND SENSITIVE observations of life in Boston in the mid-19th century through 1928, Jane Goodrich's historical novel reads like it was written in that era. The quiet hero, George Nixon Black, and his many Brahmin friends were real people, and his house, Kragsyde, was an unforgettable mansion on the North Shore.

But George's story begins in Ellsworth, Maine, where among vivid descriptions of thousands of logs sent roaring down the river for construction in the mills, he also witnesses the horrifying tar-and-feathering of a Catholic priest. His family relocates to Boston where George goes to Harvard, basically flunking out before going to work for his well-to-do father. As George steps into the footprints of Boston privilege during the early days of the Museum of Fine Arts and Trinity Church, he meets the young Isabella Stewart Gardner and observes the attitudes of the time. Goodrich conveys the secret tenderness of love as George's gentle heart falls for Frank, who fights in the Civil War and returns wounded.

After Frank dies, the younger, dapper Charles becomes George's lover in a relationship that is again developed with enticing subtlety. Without scandal, they float through Boston's society together as Charles' mischief complements George's melancholic reticence. Goodrich, who recreated the demolished Kragsyde on a piece of property in Maine, carries the story along beautifully, describing George's inner life while mixing her imagination with historical research.

PAGE 220 "Inside, in the vast oaken waiting rooms, a new immigrant would cower in bewilderment, standing beside a Boston merchant consulting his watch and counting the minutes until his train for Providence. A husband would abandon his family here, a young bride begin her journey to her home away from her mother; a freshman scholar would arrive for his first term at Harvard, a soldier be waved away to a future war." ◆

MADE TO ORDER

SINGAPORE OFFERS TASTY TREATS AND GLISTENING STREETS—WITH A CATCH

THE MOMENT YOU WALK OFF THE PLANE and into Changi Airport, a masked attendant points a MERS gun at you, checking your body heat for signs of fever and giving you a sense that not only are you being watched in this country, but there is a certain order to things. This is Singapore after all, the city-state located off the coast of Malaysia that's known for its transformation from a third-world shipping port to a first-world economic hub in a single generation.

On almost any Singaporean street you'd be hard-pressed to find a piece of trash, let alone witness a crime. Most citizens live in subsidized housing, and the government takes measures to recognize and celebrate racial and religious diversity. Skyscrapers are draped in greenery and designed by some of the world's top architects. But this idyllic setting comes with a catch: The government also controls the media, and capital punishment is revered. Is this what a city of an idealized future looks like? Before there's time to think of an answer, an MRT train arrives—there's one every 90 seconds. Bostonians will be shocked: Fast and efficient transportation is normal here. And it's necessary to travel smoothly around the city because there is so much to eat in so little time.

For a delightful foray into Singaporean cuisine, head to Ya Kun Kaya Toast's Chinatown location, where you'll be scooping up runny eggs next to a busy weekday crowd that's headed to the office. Order the original kopi or robusta coffee brewed with a "sock" cloth and kaya toast, a jam made from eggs, sugar, coconut milk and pandan leaves, paired with a poached egg. Adventurous eaters should head straight to the Chinatown hawker stalls to indulge in char kway teow—the stir-fried noodle dish is both a national favorite and the go-to breakfast of TV personality Anthony Bourdain. And be sure to visit Hong Kong Soya Sauce Chicken Rice and Noodle, a nearby stall that has yet to raise the cost of its menu items—none of which exceed $3—since receiving a Michelin star last year.

Next, head to Tiong Bahru, a neighborhood sprinkled with beautifully preserved art deco apartment buildings and specialty coffee shops that cater to an incoming hipster scene. Push your way past all of that and go to Tiong Bahru Market, where on the second floor you'll find another staple Singaporean dish, Hainanese chicken rice, at food stall number 82, which more recently made the 2017 Michelin Guide.

There are a few ways to walk off your meal when you need a break from eating. You can hit up Orchard Road to jaunt through luxury fashion shops such as ION Orchard and Tangs. Or if escaping the city's metropolis is your thing, visit the Singapore Botanic Gardens and revel in the only tropical garden to be recognized as a UNESCO World Heritage Site.

When the late afternoon rolls around, it's best to amble along the Marina Bay promenade. Start with a selfie at the Merlion statue, the city's national symbol, and walk to the Marina Bay Sands, the luxury five-star hotel sitting on the edge of Singapore's reclaimed land. For those reaching for greater heights (or desperately seeking more Facebook likes), go to the top of the hotel's observation deck for about $20 and get a peek at the famous infinity pool overlooking the city's skyline. But dipping your toes in comes at a steeper price as swimming is only for registered hotel guests.

A more budget-friendly, and just as entertaining, option is nearby nature park Gardens by the Bay. Stop by before 9 pm for the free nightly show that fills the man-made Supertree Grove with lights and sounds. Head back to the plaza along the promenade for Spectra, the Marina Bay Sands' public light and water performance. The 15-minute show is reminiscent of the Fountains of Bellagio and will have you oohing and aahing along with scores of onlookers.

After the show, make your way to East Coast Parkway's Long Beach restaurant for a fine-dining experience. Try the chili crab while admiring the ships coasting along one of the busiest ports in the world, but don't forget to save room for a late-night snack at Newton Circus, a 24-hour food center that's bustling at all hours. People-watching here is best while enjoying a tray of stingray and fresh watermelon juice to wash it down.

The journey home may be long, but departing from a world-renowned transportation hub is worth showing up a day early. Linked by Terminal 3, the Changi Crowne Plaza makes for a smoother transition to the skies as you can stretch and relax at the hotel's 540-square-meter swimming pool lined with palm trees. Basking in this urban oasis somehow feels like the city-state itself, as it's thoughtfully designed, clean, efficient and surrounded by green. Before returning home to the land of the free, it is hard not to consider the surprising sense of personal freedoms in a country with a long list of restrictions. But don't take too long to ponder this thought while lounging by the pool. It's almost time to check your bag and visit the airport's free movie theater, art exhibits and sunflower garden before returning home. Logan Airport welcomes you—and apologizes in advance for the long customs lines.

TERRE ÉTRANGÈRE

WITH EXPLORATUER, NIGHTCLUB MAVENS TRY THEIR HAND AT A MORE SERIOUS RESTAURANT

WATCHING A HOSPITALITY GROUP wander beyond its comfort zone can be exhilarating. Locals may know Big Night Entertainment Group from its glitzy Foxwoods nightclubs and Boston hot spots like Red Lantern and Empire. With their over-the-top decor, high-decibel DJs and hookup-ready crowds, the scene at those places takes precedence over food. Explorateur, Big Night's newest venture, occupies a stunning room in Boston's old Grand Masonic Lodge, embodying a lively but dignified cafe-cum-brasserie that is more Belle Epoque than va-va-voom Vegas. With its menu of French, Italian and American staples, it's hard not to be reminded of Eastern Standard Kitchen & Drinks, a pretty high bar to aspire to. So how well-advised is this bold venture?

Cocktails are a promising first point of comparison, served by a better-trained bartending staff than is typical for Big Night. Credit bar manager Gina Goyette, whose experience managing wine and beverage programs in New York shines through. Before you order the Exceptionally Long Last Word ($19), you pray the bartender will measure and mix its costly V.E.P. Chartreuse component carefully, and sigh in relief when she does. An exactingly crafted half-and-half martini ($12) is equally perfect and delicious. When it comes to wine, the French-heavy list is easy to navigate and fairly priced, from the modest house half-liter carafes ($21) to 20 wines by-the-glass ($9-$25, most under $13) and a list of 100 bottles (most under $75). The beer list (six drafts, 11 packaged options, $5-$10) is just interesting enough, neither too geeky nor lowbrow.

The dinner menu by chefs Michael Morway and Jacob Mendros is more of an adventure. Salads range from a solid frisée aux lardon ($13) with soft-boiled egg, copious chewy lardons and judicious vinaigrette to a salad niçoise ($15) that impresses in most of its details (olives, haricot vert, confit potatoes) but is marred by flavorless slices of mediocre seared tuna. The Explorateur salad ($14), an assortment of kale and marinated vegetables, is so underdressed that one wonders if the kitchen just forgot a step: risibly bad.

Salmon crudo ($15) is a currently trendy dish that restaurants should shun if they're not willing to charge for pristine-quality fish. Explorateur isn't, and like the niçoise's tuna, the result is mushy and dull. Onion soup gratiné ($10) does a better job of hitting its canonical bistro marks with good beef stock, some sherry sweetness and the gooey charm of a gruyère-laden crouton. One of the nicest surprises of the night turns up in this small plates section, a crisp, thin-crusted veggie flatbread ($15) with sweet-potato puree that delivers a saucy texture and sweetness normally supplied by tomatoes, and topped with lovely roasted aromatics, mushrooms and summer squashes: a smash.

Entrees also careen between hits and misses. The New York strip loin on the steak frites ($25) has an oddly soft texture, as though it had been mechanically tenderized; more important, it is seriously underseasoned, with the head-scratching accompaniment of a few mesclun greens (did they run out of watercress?) but some good egg-salady gribiche. About the best one can say for the chicken paillard ($18) is that it's big. The pair of barely-pounded breasts with some decently crispy skin is filling but somewhat dry and bland, again lacking much-needed salt. Halibut ($18) can't be blamed for being a mild fish to begin with, but its treatment doesn't meet the menu description: The brown butter isn't browned, and the promised capers are entirely missing, with forgettable results. Then along comes spaghetti ($16) with cherry tomatoes, garlic, olive oil and parsley, which turns out to be simple yet sensational, with the welcome, unexpected texture of housemade pasta. Whole roasted chicken for two ($45) is likewise a home run, beautifully browned all over, juicy and crisp-skinned, with an exquisite madeira jus underneath, alongside a fistful of homey, nicely browned gnudi, fritters of ricotta, egg and cheese.

Pastry chef Morgan Gray plates some crowd-pleasing standards, like a very sweet honey lavender crème brûlée ($10) with fresh berries and excellent lemon sablé cookies as well as a not-salty salted chocolate pots de crême ($10) with more fresh berries and good whipped cream. Most impressive is a terrific brown butter soufflé for two ($16) with a coarse dice of roasted pineapple on the side and a pitcher of vanilla crème anglaise to drizzle into a hole you've poked to access its airy, steamy interior.

Despite the somewhat disjointed interior—with its breakfast-and-lunch coffee counter, pastry cases and long communal tables up front—the space overall is dramatic and gorgeous, with soaring ceilings, tall windows overlooking the Common, and classic accents of bronze, subway tiles and marble. Those hard surfaces make for a painfully noisy room at peak periods. Service also has its punishing edges, with uniformly solid technical but uneven hospitality chops behind the bar, servers that drop entrees without bussing finished apps first, and one unfortunate, unbidden decision to dump a whole pitcher of sauce on our soufflé (let the customer do that to taste, please). Partiers in search of justly-famed Big Night style and sizzle will surely find it here, but until Explorateur's kitchen reaches a more consistent level, one might not want to essay dinner here without a map. ◆

Q: WHAT IS THE BEST WAY TO GET RID OF LOVE HANDLES? MY BOYFRIEND AND I BOTH HAVE THEM. WE WORK OUT BUT THEY ARE NOT GOING AWAY.

A: It sounds like you may have exercise resistant fat which can be treated with Coolsculpting. Love handles are the most common place for fat to accumulate. If you can "pinch an inch" that fat can be frozen away!

CoolSculpt is an extremely effective non-invasive body contouring treatment that freezes unwanted fat, killing off fat cells which are then naturally eliminated from your body. No needles, no surgery, and no downtime. It is safe and effective. Results are visible within six weeks of treatment and the final results are seen after three months.

Most of us have problem areas, such as our abdomen, love handles or saddlebags. CoolSculpting can be used for those areas as well as for double chins, back fat, bra fat and knee fat.

At SkinHealth, our clients have seen remarkable results with CoolScuplting!

LIGHTNING STRIKES

WONDERSTRUCK IS A VALENTINE TO SILENT CINEMA AND NEW YORK

WITH AN ADULT-MINDED OEUVRE that includes 1998's Velvet Goldmine and 2015's Carol, it's a bit unexpected for Todd Haynes to direct an adaptation of Wonderstruck. The illustrated young adult novel was written by Brian Selznick, whose earlier book, The Invention of Hugo Cabret, was just as unexpectedly brought to the screen in Martin Scorsese's spellbinding Hugo.

Both adaptations center on lonely children and feature nostalgic looks at how early cinema can feed an untapped desire to create. Thankfully for fans of Scorsese and Haynes, both films could only have sprung forth from the talents of their respective auteurs. Hugo was as much a valentine to Paris as it was to movies, and now Wonderstruck stands as both a love letter to New York and silent films.

While Haynes' movie strives to compose a visual dialogue to bridge and overlap with two periods of time—1927 and 1977—he and screenwriter Selznick (adapting his own book) grant themselves creative license to utilize the wildly different cinematic styles of the separate eras to tell their spellbinding tale.

For the silent era, this means emulating the work of pioneers like D.W. Griffith (The Birth of a Nation) and F.W. Murnau (Sunrise), who invented much of the visual language that cinema still employs to this day, while the seedy Manhattan of the '70s recalls the pioneering work of street-level masters like Scorsese (Taxi Driver) and William Friedkin (The French Connection), independent directors who artistically flourished after the collapse of the studio system.

None of this would matter if Haynes and his frequent collaborators failed to bring each storyline to convincing life, but luckily production designer Mark Friedberg, costume designer Sandy Powell and cinematographer Edward Lachman are indispensable members of his crew, who together excel at period pieces. All three are veterans of 2002's Far from Heaven, Haynes' loving tribute to the 1950s melodramas of Douglas Sirk, and just as they did with that film's evocative suburban setting, they've once again fastidiously resurrected a bygone era. But this time, they've pulled the feat off doubly well, having recreated two time periods exactly 50 years apart and set almost entirely in New York, with much of Selznick's story coming to a head while merging and magically overlapping at the Museum of Natural History.

But this time, they've pulled the feat off doubly well, having recreated two time periods.

WONDERSTRUCK ★★★½
Starring Oakes Fegley, Millicent Simmonds, Julianne Moore, Jaden Michael, Cory Michael Smith, Tom Noonan, Amy Hargreaves, Morgan Turner, Sawyer Nunes, Lauren Ridloff, James Urbaniak and Michelle Williams. Written by Brian Selznick, based upon his book. Directed by Todd Haynes. At Boston Common, Kendall Square and West Newton.

Haynes also struck lightning twice by finding two immensely talented young leads to play the 12-year-old protagonists in this decades-spanning tale. Ben (Oakes Fegley, star of last year's little-seen Disney gem, Pete's Dragon) is introduced in June 1977, when he suffers a one-two punch of devastating losses. First, his single mother (Manchester by the Sea's Michelle Williams) is tragically killed in a car crash, and then literal lightning strikes, robbing him of his hearing. Longing to find the father he's never met, Ben sneaks away from his grief-stricken aunt, boarding a bus that will transport him from his rural home in Minnesota toward destiny in the Big Apple. Meanwhile, Haynes cross-cuts this with a parallel story taking place in October 1927, as another young runaway flees Hoboken, New Jersey. The deaf-since-birth Rose (Millicent Simmonds, an immensely talented, hearing-impaired actress making her screen debut) leaves behind a father who cares little for her (Dave Made a Maze's James Urbaniak) to track down her idol, silent-screen icon Lillian Mayhew (Julianne Moore, in her fourth collaboration with Haynes), who's preparing for a stage role in New York.

Strewn with expertly art-directed garbage, a few portions of Bedford-Stuyvesant and Crown Heights—two boroughs that haven't fully gentrified—convincingly pass as 1977's Upper West Side, while a bit of visual effects trickery and a lot of dapperly dressed extras assist in evoking Manhattan in 1927.

Adding immeasurably to the authenticity of a picture that's reliant on its visuals, Lachman has photographed the movie on film—utilizing undercranked, black-and-white and long takes for the flapper-era scenes, and grainy, saturated color, long lenses and deep focus to depict the summer that Star Wars first debuted.

That summer also brought a blackout to Manhattan (due to, yes, a lightning strike), which facilitates this film's emotional climax. It's heavy on expository dialogue—which is slightly jarring for a film that's been largely wordless until now—and reliant on cosmic coincidence, though these are minor gripes in a film that you can feel good about seeing with your children. If present events have you fearing for the future, then this visit to the past should strike just the right amount of wonder for the whole family. ◆

BASS VIRTUOSO TONY LEVIN CONTINUES TO EXPAND HIS CRIMSON HORIZONS

TONY LEVIN MAKES DIFFICULT BASS lines look easy as the longest-serving member of King Crimson next to founding guitar guru Robert Fripp. But the Brookline native, who had already begun his prog-rock tenure with Peter Gabriel when he joined King Crimson in 1981, views his gig playing with the band as more challenging than ever.

"If you're on a journey, this is a unique ship to be on," Levin, 71, says from a week of rehearsals in Austin, Texas, where Crimson began the second leg of their 2017 tour that hits the Orpheum Theatre on Nov. 6. "To overuse that metaphor, I keep my life jacket on, because the music is pretty hard."

The crew has grown to eight seasoned musicians, including three drummers—Pat Mastelotto, Jeremy Stacey (taking over a kit while Bill Rieflin shifts to keys) and Gavin Harrison—who stretch across the front of the stage. The remaining players, including singer/guitarist Jakko Jakszyk and early '70s sax/flute soloist Mel Collins, occupy a riser to the rear, where the elusive Fripp has long sat in the shadows.

"That's the perfect hint at what King Crimson is like: It's just not going to be the same," Levin says. "The three drummers are not doing what might be the normal approach of banging out the same part. In fact, they never do that. They divide a number of infinite strategies for breaking up the drum parts—in time signatures that aren't normal. ... Audiences can see it, even if they have no musical training, that now this guy's playing all cymbals and this guy's playing all toms, and then they switch."

"I keep my life jacket on, because the music is pretty hard."

The results are lushly punctuated yet keenly spaced in orchestral arrangements that pack Crimson's classic crunch. The repertoire's also wider than ever. The octet recently revived several dawn-of-the-'70s nuggets (including a chunk of the "Lizard" suite) in addition to "Fallen Angel" (from 1974's Red, an album that influenced rockers from Nirvana to Tool), 2000's "The ConstruKction of Light" and new pieces that retain Crimson's dark angularities. The group nails them on its live album Official Bootleg: Live in Chicago, June 28th, 2017 released on Oct. 27. And set lists keep changing across their two-set, nearly three-hour long shows that include additions like 1981 counterpoints "Discipline" and "Indiscipline," plus "Moonchild" from the band's 1969 debut, In the Court of the Crimson King.

"Robert was twitchy about doing older repertoire—it seemed like giving in to what every band does—and then suddenly that changed, because Robert does change," Levin says of British pioneer Fripp. "We decided to approach a lot of older repertoire as if it were new music and try to reimagine it."

When it comes to determining which pieces get played each night, Levin says, "Robert goes to breakfast every morning and sits with headphones and his pad of paper and makes up a brand new set list. He emails that to each of us at about noon every day, and we go to the venue about 3 pm and work out any details."

Indeed, while improvisational spaces within the music leave challenges open for everyone onboard, Fripp—who's quite particular about fans not recording or taking photos during concerts—truly calls the shots. That included dissolving Crimson for periodic hiatuses only to relaunch with reconfigured lineups.

"I have a lot of respect for him after all these years, so whatever he senses is musically right, I'll happily go along for the ride," says Levin, a self-described "classical geek" who got his start on upright bass, played tuba and sang in barbershop quartets. He served with the Rochester Philharmonic in New York, then turned to jazz and rock. In addition to decades of performing with Gabriel and Crimson, he worked with John Lennon (on his swan song album Double Fantasy), Pink Floyd, Paul Simon, Joan Armatrading, Carly Simon and David Bowie.

Fripp also recorded with Bowie at one time, lending the buzzing guitar undertow to "Heroes," now Crimson's sole cover on occasion, including on Live in Chicago.

"There are magical nights," Levin says. "Sometimes a song will come out better than any other night, and we don't really know why. It's not science. It's more alchemy." ◆

SOME OUT-OF-THE-BOX IDEAS TO MAKE SURE AMAZON'S SHIPPING UP TO BOSTON

ACROSS THE COUNTRY, CITIES BIG AND small are vying for the chance to win Amazon's second headquarters and the company's expected 50,000 jobs. Boston's bid was generally praised as thoughtful and pragmatic, stressing our educated workforce, diverse international community and strong infrastructure. Also, we have "a wicked huge old pony track out by the airport"—I'm quoting the bid right there—and, as a city, we're "not above ordering a single tube of toothpaste on the internet instead of walking down the street to CVS." Overall, our pitch was solid, unlike New Hampshire's, which was all about how Amazon employees could wear bandanas while riding their Harleys to Weirs Beach to buy tax-free fireworks. But that's not to say that Boston's bid couldn't be improved, so allow me to improve it.

First of all, we know you Amazon folk love Seattle. Well, if you want a drizzly city on the ocean, have we got the place for you! Except, our drizzle does this thing where it freezes and—oh, we don't want to spoil the surprise. You'll see. In other similarities, both of us have NBA teams. How about those Sonics? (We haven't paid attention to the NBA for a while but we assume that nothing bad would happen to a team as beloved as the Sonics.) And your hugely expensive tunnel under the city isn't done, but ours is. Come try it out. If you're in a convertible, remember to put the top up! Why? Oh, no reason.

Like Seattle, Boston is centrally located. Get on a plane at Logan and you can be anywhere in the country within 17 hours. We enjoy special proximity to underserved Amazon markets such as Iceland, which is literally closer than San Diego, and no we're not joking about that—we just looked it up. As for traffic, bah, what's 50,000 more people? You can just dig one of your Hyperloop tunnels and blast those employees into the office at 300 mph. What, that's Elon Musk who has the Hyperloop? Well then he can come to Boston too. We welcome everyone, except Chick-fil-A.

As for your business plan, we love it. Sell books, then sell everything, hardly ever make money. A lot of people don't know this, Amazon, but your company's founder had the very first Alexa back in the '90s. And the first thing Jeff Bezos asked is, "Alexa, how do I crush my enemies?" She told him: Free expedited shipping on all Prime orders. People love that. I never even consider any product that isn't Prime. The Louvre could be hard up for cash and put the actual Mona Lisa on Amazon for $100, but if they charged extra for shipping I'd be like, "Sorry, I'll just buy this other Mona Lisa from seller Guangzhou Excellent Arts LLC and get it by Wednesday."

You may have noticed that our official bid was light on the bootlicking. But really, we'd love to have you here. We're not desperate or anything, but you can put your headquarters at Suffolk Downs or on the waterfront or actually, now that we think of it, right on the Common. We'll tear down Fenway. We'll build a bridge to Nantucket. We'll stage daily flash mobs where we'll twerk for your amusement! But only if you want. How about we rename Southie the Ama-zone and we'll make all the triple-deckers look like giant cardboard boxes with Prime stickers on them. And all the runners in the Boston Marathamazon will be required to deliver a package from Hopkinton to Copley Square, with Prime runners continuing all the way to the Ama-zone. We'll even read books on Kindles. OK, maybe not that last one. We all have limits.

Like we said, we're not desperate. After all, we've already got GE and Gillette and shoe companies and universities and hospitals and the national headquarters of the 99 right there in Woburn. Much like Amazon, Boston's come a long way. Forty years ago, our economy was 39 percent based on Aerosmith. In the '90s, we suffered a crushing recession after the breakup of NKOTB. But we learned our lessons and diversified our local economy—when LFO failed to follow up "Summer Girls," we were prepared. Now we have multiple engines of job creation, from supplying extras for Ben Affleck movies to cleaning up confetti after championship parades. We guess you know all about that last one, since the Seahawks won the Super Bowl in 2014. Good for you! Winning the Super Bowl is hard to do, and you should be proud of yourselves. Even if you lose a Super Bowl in crushing fashion, it's still cool that you got there.

You're probably aware that Boston has a long tradition of telling people to go away, from the British to the Olympics. So you should appreciate the fact that we're actually being friendly for once. In the event you spurn our generous offer, trust us, we'll get over it. But remember that we hold a grudge. We're ready to go on this headquarters. But we're also ready to walk down the street for that toothpaste. ◆

As for your business plan, we love it. Sell books, then sell everything, hardly ever make money.

HOCKEY HALL OF FAMER AND BOSTON BRUINS president Cam Neely played 13 years in the NHL, the final 10 with the Bruins, until a hip injury ended his career in 1996. The Vancouver native racked up numerous records and accolades, becoming only the second Bruins player to record back-to-back 50-goal seasons. Neely, 52, has made cameos in seven feature films—Monument Ave., Dumb and Dumber, Dumb and Dumber To, D2: The Mighty Ducks, What's the Worst That Could Happen?, Me, Myself & Irene and Stuck on You—and has appeared on TV shows such as Beverly Hills, 90210, Cheers and Rescue Me. He sits on the board of directors of the Hockey Hall of Fame, CoachUp and A.S. Roma S.P.A. On Nov. 18, he will present the 23rd annual stand-up comedy marathon Comics Come Home, a benefit for the Cam Neely Foundation for Cancer Care. Hosted by Denis Leary, the event will feature comedians such as Jimmy Fallon and Craig Ferguson performing at TD Garden. (The Improper is also a sponsor of the event.) He lives with his wife and two kids in the western suburbs.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Greatest hockey player of all time? CAM NEELY: I have to go with Bobby Orr. He really, more than anybody, changed the way the position [of defenseman] is played.

What are the odds that the Bruins win the Stanley Cup this year? I don't like answering those questions, Jonathan. [Laughs.]

Last time you actually put on skates? The Winter Classic game at Gillette Stadium two years ago, and if you ask me that question 10 years from now, it'll probably be the same.

Did you ever try figure skating? I tried figure skating and speedskating, with the proper skates for both those sports. With figure skating, the toe pick was not my friend, and with speedskating, you've gotta be careful when you fall. Those blades are very long.

Do you have all your own teeth? No. In my generation, there are probably not too many who do. ... Now, most players are wearing mouthguards, which didn't really happen back when I was playing. But by the time their careers are over, they still might have a few dental issues.

Worst injury you ever had playing? I can't spell it for you, but myositis ossificans in my left quad. It was the most pain that I've ever dealt with in my life. In essence, it was an extremely bad charley horse that just didn't go away.

Funniest person you've ever known? I'm gonna go with Michael J. Fox.

Favorite stand-up comedian of all time? Damn. There are a lot of good ones, but the late, great Patrice O'Neal never failed to make me laugh.

So with Comics Come Home, do you invite the comedians or do they volunteer? Well, it's interesting. Denis [Leary] does the invitations, and early on, he said it was challenging to get comedians, for like the first few years. Now he says he's got people calling him up and asking if they can be part of the lineup, that they'd love to do the show.

Anyone you've ever had in the show who you would never have back, and why? Yes. Because maybe I didn't find them as funny as I would have liked. But I can't really complain too much, Jonathan, because we're so grateful that they donate their time for this.

Denis Leary's hair—is that shit for real, or is that a weave? [Laughs.] Yes, it is all his. There's something strange goin' on there DNA-wise.

True or false: Jimmy Fallon is part Keebler elf? [Laughs.] I hadn't heard that, but now that you mention it...

New thing at Comics Come Home that you're most excited about? There's always new comedians, and I'm always interested to see how they perform and what type of humor they have, how the crowd reacts.

Thing you will never change about Comics Come Home? Censoring comedians will never happen.

How's the golf game? It wasn't my best summer. I didn't play as much as I would have liked, and when I did play, most rounds were not what I was hoping for.

Why—aside from the obvious similarity of a long stick and a small object—is it that pro hockey players all seem to be outstanding golfers? I think the mechanics of shooting a puck and swinging a club are very similar. It's body mechanics and muscle memory.

Ever gotten a hole-in-one? I have not. I'm still looking for the elusive hole-in-one.

What do you miss most about Canada? The politeness. Canadians are just so much more polite.

If you hadn't become a pro hockey player, what would you be doing now? Petroleum distributor. As in, running a gas station. Pumping gas was one of my last jobs.

If I'd told your 10-year-old self where you'd be and what you'd be doing today, what would he have said? "Are you fucking kidding me?" [Laughs.] I don't know if I'd swear, though. I might get my mouth washed out with soap.

Greatest single accomplishment? Convincing Paulina to marry me.

You just scored major points at home. If one of your kids came to you and said they wanted to play pro hockey, what would you say? Well, my son Jack did say he wanted to play, so we signed him up. I'm all for trying everything, with both of my kids.

What goes through your mind when you look up at the rafters in the Garden and see your retired jersey? It's an honor to be up there with those other retired numbers, and sometimes it's hard to believe.

So is eight your lucky number? It has become that, yes. I don't really gamble because I never really feel lucky, but if I were playing roulette, I would put a chip on eight black.

What do you want on your tombstone? I'm thinking about getting cremated, but I don't know: "Good guy, good father, good husband, who liked to help others." ◆

"With figure skating, the toe pick was not my friend, and with speedskating, you've gotta be careful when you fall."

Jaylen Brown and Jayson Tatum have played fewer than 100 regular-season games in their NBA careers—combined. Brown, a second-year player out of Cal-Berkeley, turned 21 in late October, and Tatum, a rookie out of Duke, won't even turn 20 till March. These guys are young. But the NBA Draft's two most recent No. 3 picks stand as the future of the Celtics franchise. If Boston's brain trust desires, they could each be wearing Celtics uniforms till the middle of next decade. And the similarities don't stop there: Both players left college after one season to turn pro. Both are vying to be the face of the franchise. And each has superstar potential. On a recent trip to the Celtics practice facility, we armed them with a set of talking points and asked them to interview each other. The witty banter, sly grins and bouts of laughter showed that while they might be playing like grown men on the court, they're still up for some youthful play when they're off the clock.

JAYLEN BROWN: DID YOU MAKE ANY BIG SPLURGES WITH YOUR FIRST PAYCHECK?

Jayson Tatum: Nah. I got a car.
Brown: Just one?
Tatum: Yeah, one. [Smiles.] I purchased one car. And I got an apartment and I got an apartment for my mom.

BROWN: DO YOU MISS COLLEGE AT ALL?

Tatum: I miss college a lot.
Brown: Me too. What's the thing you miss most?
Tatum: The atmosphere. Just being on campus.
Brown: The parties? [Both laugh.]
Tatum: No, just walking outside your dorm room and seeing everybody on campus and at the bus stop. And the games in college. And the atmosphere overall.
Brown: Interesting.

BROWN: WHAT WAS DRAFT NIGHT LIKE FOR YOU?

Tatum: Draft night was the day all my dreams came true. It was the best night of my life, just hearing your name called and having your dream come true.
Brown: That's cute. Really cute. [Both laugh.]

BROWN: BESIDES MYSELF, WHO'S THE BEST VETERAN MENTOR ON THE TEAM?

Tatum: Hmm. It's tough. We've got a great group of guys. Kyrie [Irving], Al Horford. Even Marcus Morris. I'd say those three are the top three veterans on the team. How many years have you played?
Brown: Only one more than you. [Both laugh.]

BROWN: OK, WE'RE GOING TO GET TO SOME FUN STUFF. HOW DOES THAT SOUND? ... LAST PERSON YOU TEXTED?

Tatum: You.
Brown: Me? That's not true. [Both laugh.]
Tatum: You never text me back. That's the problem in our relationship. You text me back about two-and-a-half hours later.
Brown: That's not true. I texted you like 30 minutes ago.
Tatum: OK, I appreciate that.

BROWN: FAVORITE MOVIE?

Tatum: Life.
Brown: Life. That's a good movie, man.
Tatum: You know about Life?
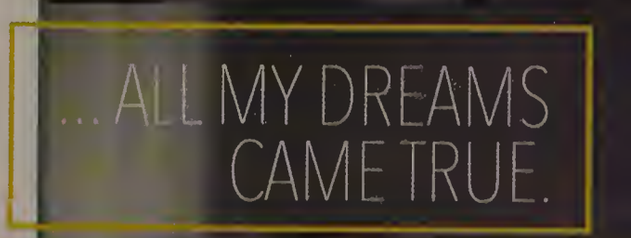
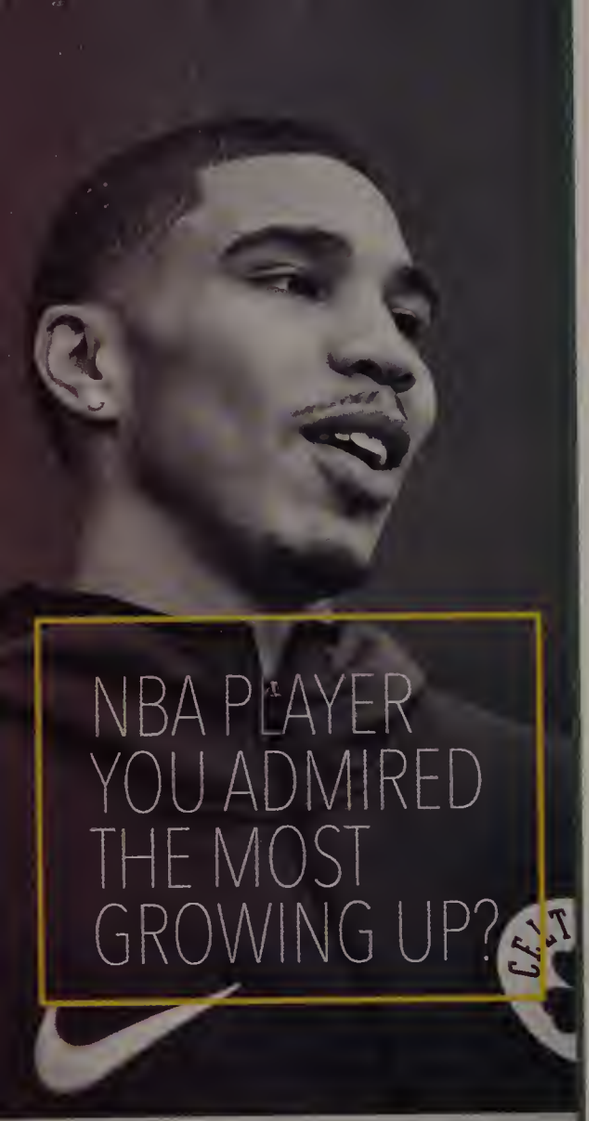
Brown: Yeah.
Tatum: You know, you kinda look like Bernie Mac. [Both laugh.]



BROWN: WHO'S A BETTER ANALYST, CHARLES BARKLEY OR JALEN ROSE?

Tatum: Charles Barkley.
Brown: Charles Barkley? You sure?
Tatum: OK, I'm just gonna let that one go.
Brown: No comment.



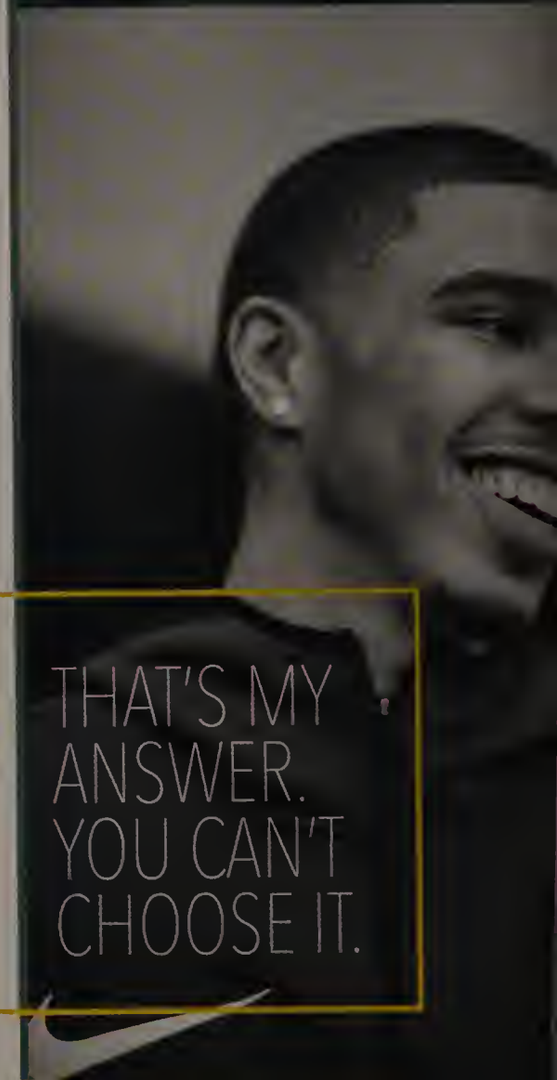
BROWN: IF YOU WEREN'T A PRO BASKETBALL PLAYER, WHAT CAREER WOULD YOU BE IN?

Tatum: I think I'd be a basketball coach or a trainer. Something that would keep me involved in basketball. Like, I'd probably be your trainer.
Brown: You'd be my trainer? My trainer?
Tatum: Yeah, your trainer.
Brown: I'd have to pay you?
Tatum: Or I'd have to live with you, like board and room is free.
Brown: In my house?
Tatum: Yeah, you got like six bedrooms.

JAYSON TATUM: WHAT DID YOU THINK WHEN I CHANGED MY NUMBER TO ZERO AND I BROKE UP OUR 7/11 NICKNAME?

Jaylen Brown: I was a little indifferent about it. At first, because I was zero in college, I thought that I should be able to be zero, but they said the 7 jersey was selling too much. And they came up with some B.S. story to let you get it because you're a princess. [Laughs.] So I let you get zero. I was like, you know what, "He's a good guy: Let him have it."
Tatum: I'm a good guy?
Brown: You're a good guy.
Tatum: I appreciate that.

TATUM: NBA PLAYER YOU ADMIRED THE MOST GROWING UP?



Brown: Kobe Bryant.
Tatum: That's my answer. You can't choose it.
Brown: I think we think alike.
Tatum: But I've heard you say Tracy McGrady before.
Brown: Kobe and T-Mac are my two.
Tatum: I always stay the same. I always say Kobe.
Brown: For me it was the both of them. I can't have two players I admire?
Tatum: It's favorite player. Singular.
Brown: I can't choose between the two.
Tatum: You have to.
Brown: I have to? [Both laugh.] If I had to choose? Hmm, I couldn't.
Tatum: But listen, you have to. It's player.
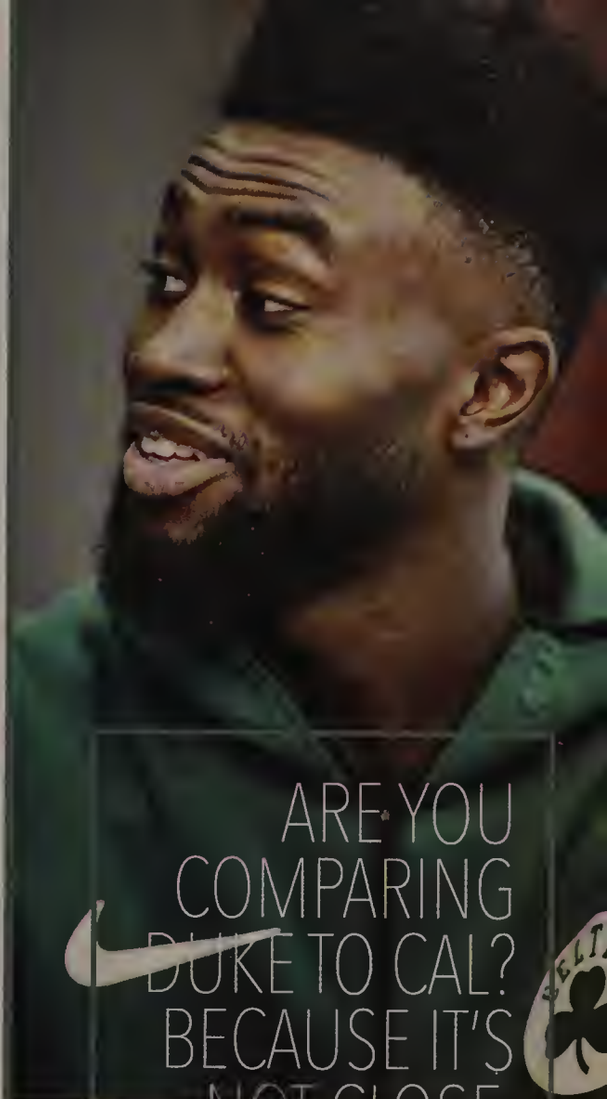
Brown: OK, who's your favorite, your mom or your dad? You have to choose.
Tatum: My mom. [Both laugh.]
Brown: OK, next question.

TATUM: LAST BOOK YOU READ, SMART GUY, CAL-BERKELEY GUY?

Brown: Say it again.
Tatum: Last book you read?
Brown: Nah, say Cal-Berkeley guy again. [Smiles.] Last book I read was Pound the Stone by Joshua Medcalf.
Tatum: Was it good?
Brown: Good book. Hit the stone 99 times and nothing happens. Hit it the 100th time and it finally splits in half. Perseverance. Something you should try.

TATUM: FAVORITE COLLEGE COURSE? YOU WENT TO CLASS, RIGHT?



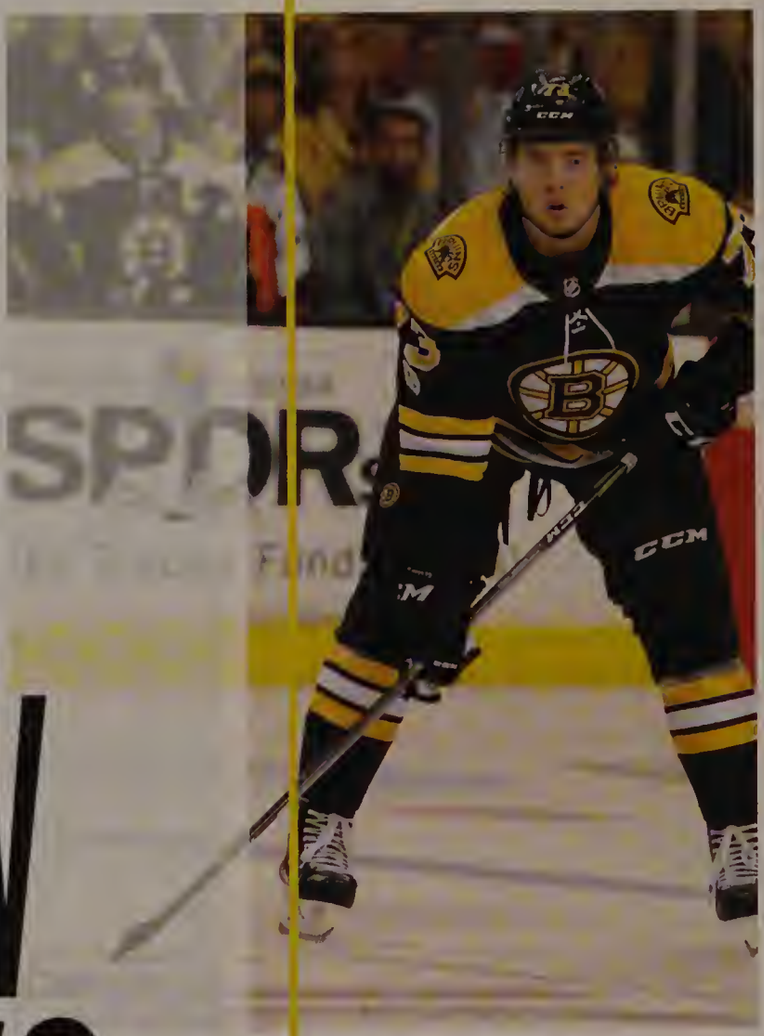
Brown: I did. I definitely went to class.
Tatum: How many years did you go to Cal?
Brown: Enough. I got into some graduate-level courses because they told me that regular classes weren't enough.
Tatum: You went to a public school?
Brown: I went to a public school.
Tatum: Cal is a public school?
Brown: It's the best public school in the United States.
Tatum: I just wanted to clarify that.
Brown: Are you comparing Duke to Cal? Because it's not close.
Tatum: I wouldn't dare compare Duke to Cal.
Brown: Just checking.
Tatum: Answer the question: Favorite college course?
Brown: That's tough. Global Poverty in Practice.

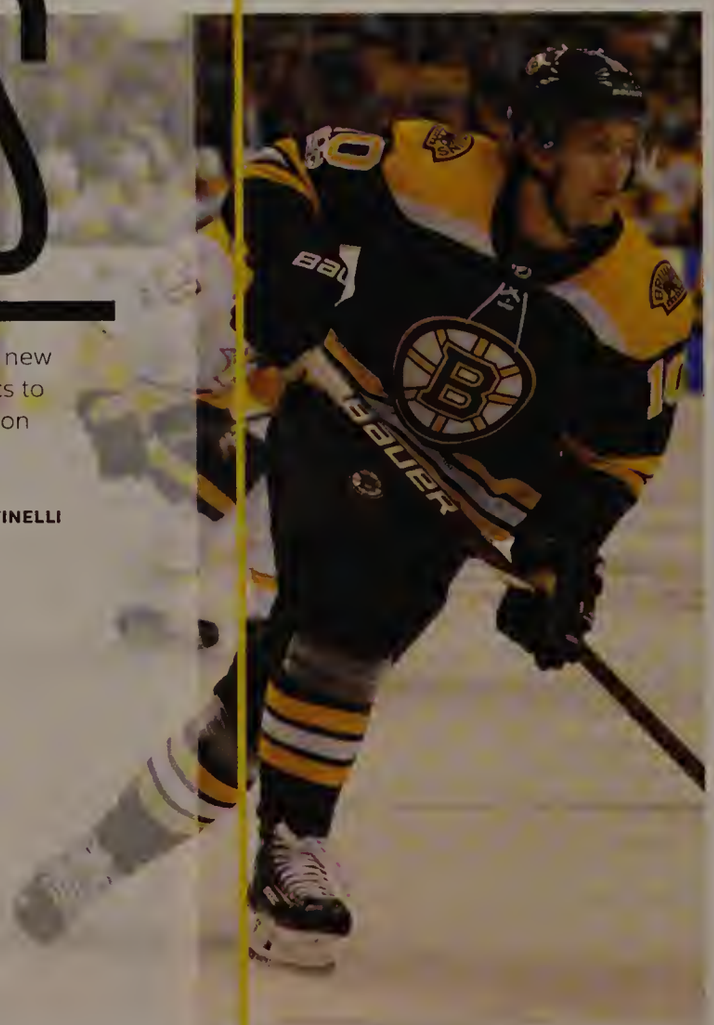
TATUM: YOU'VE TRAVELED THE WORLD, RIGHT?

Brown: No, no.
Tatum: Have you been outside the country on more than one occasion?
Brown: Yes.
Tatum: If you could go one place in the world that you haven't been, where would it be?
Brown: Egypt.
Tatum: Why?
Brown: I just want to go. I'm curious.
Tatum: Curious about what?
Brown: Everything.
Tatum: What's everything?
Brown: I want to see the pyramids.

TATUM: LAST QUESTION: JAYLEN BROWN, WHAT'S YOUR MIDDLE NAME?

Brown: No, not today. Don't worry about my middle name. What's your middle name?
Tatum: I'm interviewing you, sir. It says, "What is your middle name?"
Brown: That's what it says?
Tatum: Yeah. Who cares? What's your middle name?
Brown: I'm not saying.
Tatum: What's it start with?
Brown: "M."
Tatum: Are you going to say it?
Brown: No, but if you guess it, I'll give it to you.
Tatum: How many letters?
Brown: A lot.
Tatum: Is it a girl's name?
Brown: Nope.
Tatum: Is it a common name?
Brown: I was named after someone.
Tatum: Someone famous?
Brown: A boxer.
Tatum: Muhammad?
Brown: Close. It's Marselles. Cassius Marcellus Clay.





THE NEW GUYS

The essential stats on four new Bruins and four new Celtics to keep an eye on this season

BY SARAH HAGMAN & MATT MARTINELLI

CHARLIE McAVOY

HOW HE GOT HERE: The New York native took online courses to get an early start at Boston University, where as the youngest Division I hockey player, he put up 25 points in his first year. As a sophomore, the top prospect met with all but one NHL team during the scouting combine before the Bruins selected him in the first round of the 2016 draft. Just two weeks after leaving the Terriers—where he was paired with B's prospect Matt Grzelcyk—and with only four AHL games under his belt, the defenseman had to swing by his dorm room to pick up his passport for a trip to Ottawa, where he made his NHL debut in last season's playoffs. In six games, McAvoy logged 157 minutes—a number only bested by captain Zdeno Chara—and he tallied three assists, tying Brad Marchand and David Backes for a team high.

WHAT TO EXPECT: The 19-year-old, who says he models his game after Norris Trophy winner and two-way player Drew Doughty, started 2017 on a high note, notching an assist and a goal in the season opener. Slotted for the second line, he isn't afraid to throw his body around, and there's already some murmurs of him contending for rookie of the year.

CAREER HIGHLIGHT: McAvoy helped bring home the gold during the 2017 World Junior Ice Hockey Championships and was named player of the game in the final match.

DID YOU KNOW: Bobby Orr gave the kid a thumbs-up, calling McAvoy's playoff performance "impressive." The debut was one for the books for another reason: He was just the third rookie this century to register more than 24 minutes in his first postseason game.

ANDERS BJORK

HOW HE GOT HERE: Bjork spent two years with the U.S. National Team Development Program and was then picked up in the fifth round of the 2014 draft, but he has since improved his stock. During his sophomore year at Notre Dame, the Wisconsin native notched 35 points in as many games and then earned a career-high 52 points in his final season with the Fighting Irish. Bjork signed an entry-level contract with the B's during the offseason to compete for a spot in the offensive lineup.

WHAT TO EXPECT: The left-hander brings serious speed and has three seasons of defense-first hockey on his resume. That should play well on the top line to the right side of Patrice Bergeron, where coach Bruce Cassidy slotted him after saying Bjork's the "furthest ahead" of the young newcomers. In Bergeron's first game back after a recent injury, the line combined for four goals—two netted by Bjork—and six assists.

CAREER HIGHLIGHT: After helping lead Notre Dame to its first Frozen Four appearance in five years, Bjork finished the season as Hockey East's fourth highest scorer, was named one of 10 Hobey Baker Award finalists and was selected as the NCAA Northeast Regional's Most Outstanding Player

DID YOU KNOW: Bjork was another finalist in 2017—for the Hockey Humanitarian Award. The student-athlete far exceeded the team's required community service hours, FaceTiming the teachers and students on the road and even earning a desk in the third-grade classroom he frequented during his spare time

JAKE DEBRUSK

HOW HE GOT HERE: The 2015 first-round pick is coming off a year spent in the minors in Providence, where he averaged nearly a point per game during the second half of the season. The team's youngest player ended 2017 with 19 goals and 30 assists, finishing second on Providence in points and first among rookies. While six of his fellow forwards got called up for an NHL appearance, DeBrusk stayed in Providence—which Cassidy chalked up to prioritizing his long-term development over the Bruins' short-term needs. He spent the summer at home in Edmonton skating alongside former B's defenseman Johnny Boychuk before fighting his way into a role with Boston during training camp.

WHAT TO EXPECT: The 21-year-old forward is often described—by his coaches and himself—as "greasy." He's a hustler, digs pucks out of tight spaces and heads to the net, providing a nice complement to David Krejci. For the past few seasons, the veteran playmaker has been looking for a consistent finisher on the left side of his line and he's rotated through David Backes, Matt Beleskey, Ryan Spooner and Frank Vatrano, among others.

CAREER HIGHLIGHT: During Providence's first-round playoff series with Wilkes-Barre, DeBrusk tallied three goals and one assist in five games.

DID YOU KNOW: The left winger notched a goal and an assist in the season opener, prompting his father—former NHL tough guy Louie DeBrusk—to chant "Fucking right kid" before shedding a few tears.

PAUL POSTMA

HOW HE GOT HERE: In the Bruins' first offseason move, they signed the 28-year-old free agent to a one-year contract. A healthy scratch at the start of the season, Postma was promoted to fill in for an injured Adam McQuaid, whose broken leg will keep him out for two months. The defenseman wrapped up his first game in Black and Gold with three shots and one block.

WHAT TO EXPECT: The Alberta native spent nearly a decade with the Winnipeg Jets' organization and played in 191 games during his seven seasons in the league. Due to a few injuries, most of the action came last year, when he suited up for 65 matches and averaged just under 11 minutes on the ice with a positive plus-minus rating. Although he can play on either side of the defense, he was brought in to balance out the lefty-leaning roster. Postma has a big shot and, as a young veteran, brings some more experience to a D-line that's sporting a couple youngsters.

CAREER HIGHLIGHT: Postma logged six seasons in the major junior Western Hockey League. In 2009, he was awarded the Plus-Minus Award for finishing with a plus-67 on the Calgary Hitmen—an honor previously earned by former Bruins Mark Recchi, Peter Schaefer and Andrew Ference.

DID YOU KNOW: With a power-play shot from the blue line, Postma became the first player to score for the Atlanta-Thrashers-turned-Winnipeg-Jets in the newly relocated team's preseason opener in September 2011.

KYRIE IRVING

HOW HE GOT HERE: The former top overall draft pick stunned the NBA world this summer when word spread that he demanded a trade from the Cleveland Cavaliers after three straight Finals appearances. But the storyline got even more bonkers when Irving was shipped to rival Boston in exchange for All-NBA second teamer Isaiah Thomas, two-way tough guy Jae Crowder, 6-foot-11 prospect Ante Zizic and a coveted draft pick. The 25-year-old point guard has already been positioned as a franchise cornerstone in the two months he's been part of the Celtics.

WHAT TO EXPECT: It'd be safe to look at Irving's stat line over his six-year career and pencil him in for about 22 points and six assists. But there remains a hope among some fans that Irving can thrive outside of LeBron James' shadow and as a first option on offense. That line of thinking stems from Steph Curry's statistical jump under coach Steve Kerr's tutelage at Golden State—a narrative that fans hope Kyrie can replicate under Celtics coach Brad Stevens. As for his defensive shortcomings, Irving has a reputation of increasing his effort in the playoffs, but perhaps Stevens can convince him to work harder during the regular season.

CAREER HIGHLIGHT: With Game 7 of the NBA Finals tied and less than a minute to play on the road against the greatest regular-season team of all time, Irving crossed up Curry and sunk a game-winning, fallaway three-pointer to give the Cavaliers their first NBA title. The Wall Street Journal has dubbed it the greatest shot in NBA history. Enough said.

DID YOU KNOW: Irving's father, Drederick, starred for Boston University's hoops team in the mid '80s, scoring 1,931 points and having his No. 11 retired by the Terriers. Drederick went on to play professionally overseas, including Australia, where Kyrie was born. After Kyrie's mother died when he was 4, Drederick worked on Wall Street as a financial broker and was in the World Trade Center lobby during the Sept. 11 attacks. He escaped amid the chaos but lost many friends and colleagues.

ARON BAYNES

HOW HE GOT HERE: After graduating from Washington State University in 2009, Baynes played professionally in Europe for a few years before latching on with the San Antonio Spurs in January 2013. After a two-year stint for the Detroit Pistons, Baynes joined the Celtics this summer as a free agent on a one-year, $4.3 million contract.

WHAT TO EXPECT: The 6-foot-10 center is expected to lend some heft to a team that lacks frontcourt depth. He can line up alongside veteran big man Al Horford, giving the Celtics a size advantage against most teams, or he can anchor the second unit as a backup center. Last year, he had the second-best net rating on the Pistons, with the team considerably better on defense when Baynes was playing.

CAREER HIGHLIGHT: Baynes won an NBA title with San Antonio in his first full season in the league. Although he barely played in the Finals, he tallied 10 points and 7 rebounds in the Spurs' Game 1 win over Portland in the second round of those same playoffs.

DID YOU KNOW: The New Zealand native played for Australia in the 2012 and 2016 Olympics, nearly helping the country to its first men's basketball medal in its last appearance. Baynes scored the go-ahead layup with 9.7 seconds left during the bronze-medal game against Spain, but last-second free throws gave the Spaniards an 89-88 win.

SEMI OJELEYE

HOW HE GOT HERE: One of 2013's top high school recruits in the country, Ojeleye started his college career at Duke. Barely playing in two seasons, he transferred to Southern Methodist University, where he led the school to a conference championship. After declaring for the NBA Draft, the Celtics selected him this year with the 37th pick and signed him to a four-year deal.

WHAT TO EXPECT: When he was drafted in June, the Celtics still had a full roster, but after purging payroll to sign Gordon Hayward and trading away three players to Cleveland in exchange for Irving, there was suddenly room for the rookie to log some playing time. His defensive effort and hustle are already at an NBA level, and once he learns the team's defensive rotations, he could be an above-average defender. Ojeleye shot 42 percent from three-point range in college, so he's expected to develop into a good spot-up shooter as well.

CAREER HIGHLIGHT: In his final college season, Ojeleye averaged 19 points and nearly 7 rebounds a game. He was named the player of the year in the American Athletic Conference, and he scored 24 points and grabbed 10 rebounds in SMU's first-round loss in the NCAA tournament.

DID YOU KNOW: Named Jesusemilore Talodabijesu Ojeleye, the 22-year-old led his teammates in a sideline prayer after Gordon Hayward's horrific injury in the season-opening game.

DANIEL THEIS

HOW HE GOT HERE: The 25-year-old forward came up in the German youth basketball system, playing professionally for a few years and even suiting up for the NBA's Washington Wizards summer league team in 2014. In June—long before the Celtics had any roster or cap room—reports spread that the team was committed to signing Theis and bringing him to Boston. He officially inked a rookie deal with the team in mid-July.

WHAT TO EXPECT: The 6-foot-9-inch Theis appears to possess the versatility that the Celtics covet as he can stretch the floor with three-point range, and he showed he can defend bigger players during his career in Germany. He's seen his minutes steadily increase during the early part of the season, posting an 11-point effort in 21 minutes against the Knicks.

CAREER HIGHLIGHT: Theis was named the defensive player of the year in the German League last season, one of many awards he's won in that league. Other honors include best young player in 2014 and most effective German player in 2016 as well as four straight All-Star appearances.

THREE'S A CROWD It's lights, camera, love triangle in director William Wellman's 1931 film Other Men's Women. Playboy Bill comes to stay with his friend Jack, a fellow locomotive engineer. A romance unfolds between Bill and Jack's wife, Lily, simmering for days until it eventually culminates with a kiss. A fistfight, a train derailment, a runaway wife and a half-hearted proposal ensue. This example of pre-code cinema from Brookline native Wellman delves into the consequences of betrayal, and stars James Cagney before his turn in The Public Enemy. BLADE RUNNER 2049 ★1/2 If I never see Blade Runner 2049 again, it'll be too soon. It feels strange saying this about the long-awaited sequel to 1982's Blade Runner, a movie I've seen dozens of times. Director Ridley Scott's hugely influential "future noir" was neither a critical nor commercial success when it was released. But in the 35 years since, most observers now agree that Blade Runner and its rain-soaked dystopia is a masterpiece—something I'll never accuse its sequel of, despite the warm critical reception that it has received. Time has been kind to Scott's expressionistic triumph of production design, pioneering electronic music, shadow-laden cinematography and plot about the very human urge to fit in, but the overlong follow-up from Denis Villeneuve (director of last year's equally overpraised sci-fi film Arrival) is very much a product of 2017, despite its 2049 setting. The small-scaled intimacy of the '82 picture has been replaced by nearly everything that's wrong with contemporary filmmaking: Who needs ambiguity when Hollywood studios are in the franchise business? Laying the groundwork for more theoretical sequels, this 164-minute film suffers from a weak protagonist, K (Ryan Gosling)—a cop tasked with hunting down and "retiring" (i.e.: killing) rogue replicants, the job Rick Deckard (Harrison Ford) held in the original. Ford's been unfairly criticized for delivering wooden performances, but the warmth he brings when he shows up for this film's final hour simply shames Gosling. When it comes to the future, I'm happy to stick with the past. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

THE FLORIDA PROJECT ★★★★ You can get a good sense of Sean Baker's intentions by looking at the "special thanks" contained in the credits of the filmmaker's latest treasure of neorealism. Casting is key in Baker's films—see 2015's Tangerine, a feature he shot with an iPhone—so it's no wonder he's extended a debt of gratitude to George "Spanky" McFarland, child star of the Depression-era's Our Gang shorts, and Hal Roach, the producer who discovered him. With 7-year-old first-time actress Brooklynn Prince, Baker has struck gold. This little rascal plays Moonee, a rambunctious latchkey kid who spends her days getting into—and talking her way out of—trouble among the underclass of Orlando, the motel dwellers who live in the shadow of Disney's Magic Kingdom, a place where few of them can afford to visit. True to the Our Gang influence, Baker and co-writer Chris Bergoch have surrounded Prince with a couple of other talented novices as her pals, Christopher Rivera as Scooty and Valeria Cotto as Jancey, a new friend who's introduced while spitting on her mother's car. A big kid herself, Moonee's heavily tattooed young mom, Halley (Instagram personality and another real find, 24-year-old Brooklynite Bria Vinaite) is in way over her head. And then there's the motel's manager, Bobby (lone old pro Willem Dafoe), who runs the property like a grumpy but loving grandpa; a non-judging surrogate for Baker himself, Bobby's the glue that binds these misfits together. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

GOODBYE CHRISTOPHER ROBIN ★★ Coming on the heels of 2011's My Week with Marilyn and 2015's Woman in Gold, British director Simon Curtis dips his toes into another historical drama. But Goodbye Christopher Robin, his glimpse into the relationship between Winnie-the-Pooh author A. A. Milne (Ex Machina's Domhnall Gleeson) and his 8-year-old son Christopher Robin (newcomer Will Tilston), treads more closely in the footsteps of 2004's Finding Neverland, the fictionalized look at writer J.M. Barrie's friendship with the family that inspired him to pen Peter Pan. In other words, it's a mechanically maudlin mess. The plodding script by Frank Cottrell Boyce and Simon Vaughan does little to help, leaning as hard as it does on sentimental pablum. Almost as bad is the atypically overbearing score by Carter Burwell, who clearly realized the film wasn't successfully pulling the heartstrings on its own, so he laid the saccharine music on thick. The resulting treacle is like the aural equivalent of molasses. In spite of it all, the actors turn in some good work. Tilston's smile lights up the screen as much as Gleeson's turn as Milne darkens it after the World War I veteran suffers through periodic bouts of post-traumatic stress disorder. And as Christopher's mother, Margot Robbie displays a fiercely stiff upper lip while jealously chastising Christopher's far more maternal live-in nanny, Olive. As played by Boardwalk Empire's Kelly Macdonald, Olive's scenes with her young charge offer some of the film's few authentic emotions. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

THE KILLING OF A SACRED DEER ★★★ There are a few things you should know before setting foot in a Yorgos Lanthimos film. The Greek director's movies, like 2009's Dogtooth and 2015's The Lobster (both Oscar nominees), are maddeningly obtuse and deadpan to a fault. Off-kilter and prone to sudden bursts of violence, his pictures will either pull you into their subversive, darkly comic vibes or send you running for the exit. So it's only fitting that his latest provocation, which he's co-scripted with frequent collaborator and playwright Efthymis Filippou, opens on an extreme close-up of an open-heart surgery (and yes, that's a real organ pumping away as it's being cut into on screen) being performed by eminent cardiologist and recovering alcoholic Steven Murphy (Colin Farrell of The Lobster). Take it as a warning that this film, which borrows its title from the ending of Euripides' Iphigenia in Aulis, is not for the squeamish. The plot involves an impossible choice that must be made by Steven involving his seemingly perfect nuclear family, including wife Anna (Nicole Kidman, Farrell's co-star in Sofia Coppola's recent remake of The Beguiled), their 12-year-old son, Bob (Sunny Suljic), and 14-year-old daughter, Kim (Raffey Cassidy, Young Snow White in 2012's Snow White and the Huntsman). If you happen to be up on your Euripides, you may have some inkling of the Greek tragedy that's about to unfold, set in motion by Martin (Dunkirk's Barry Keoghan), the polite 16-year-old who one suspects is a fan of Cape Fear. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

LBJ ★★★ At a recent screening of this political drama from director Rob Reiner, Lyndon Baines Johnson biographer Doris Kearns Goodwin let it be known that Woody Harrelson completely nails the Texan she knew personally. I'll take it on faith that she's right, though the actor's uncanny makeup job (courtesy of Ve Neill from SyFy's Face Off) does a good deal of getting him there. Sure, Harrelson still may not be the physical match for LBJ that Bryan Cranston was in Jay Roach's All the Way, last year's HBO movie version of the Broadway play, but the actor's natural charm comes through even as he downplays his comic instincts. The film dramatizes the period between when Johnson loses the 1960 Democratic presidential nomination to U.S. Sen. John Fitzgerald Kennedy (Jeffrey Donovan of USA's Burn Notice) till just after LBJ takes the oath of office to succeed the slain president. Richard Jenkins (Oscar-nominated lead of The Visitor) lends great support as Johnson's Southern mentor, U.S. Sen. Richard Russell, who butts heads with his old friend when JFK's unexpected successor decides to champion the Civil Rights Act. Although LBJ is often remembered for expanding the war in Vietnam, Reiner's film does a fair job of humanizing the man who had an impossible act to follow. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

The Meyerowitz Stories (New and Selected) ★★★1/2 Do you miss the Woody Allen films of old? Wish he still made classics like Annie Hall and Manhattan, his best-known hits from the '70s, back before his personal life began making more headlines than his movies? Well, writer Noah Baumbach might be the answer to your cinema-seeking prayers. While certainly not a household name like Allen, the talented writer/director's been making movies for more than 20 years. But it's been during the past decade, around the time he made 2005's comedic divorce drama, The Squid and the Whale, that his films started to quietly position Baumbach as the heir apparent to one of his clearest influences. And while his latest might come the closest to being an homage to Allen, it still retains Baumbach's own voice. It showcases a wonderfully nebbishy performance by 80-year-old Oscar-winner Dustin Hoffman as gray-maned and thickly bearded patriarch Harold Meyerowitz, a failed artist who firmly believes he's an unrecognized artist. This, of course, has placed a heavy burden on his three adult children, each the product of different relationships. Ben Stiller, who starred in 2010's Greenberg and 2014's While We're Young for Baumbach, does fine work as the youngest son, Matthew, but it's Adam Sandler who turns in surprisingly great work as Matthew's half brother, Danny. The two gather around their dad with their awkward half sister Jean (Elizabeth Marvel of Homeland) in this novelistically episodic and richly mature, if relatively minor, gem. (At Kendall Square and streaming on Netflix.)

Only the Brave ★★★1/2 Don't let the poor marketing campaign dissuade you from seeing director Joseph Kosinski's terrific, true-life tale, an emotionally charged drama detailing the heroic story of the Granite Mountain Hotshots. Based on Sean Flynn's GQ article about the local firefighters who bucked the odds to become one of the most elite teams of wildfire combatants in the nation, this timely tale is anchored by a stoic performance from Josh Brolin (last year's Hail, Caesar!), who's quietly grown into being one of the best, most underappreciated leading men in the business. He plays Eric Marsh, the "Supe" of the Granite Mountain crew, a man who talks to the flames he's dedicated his life to extinguishing—even as they pose a very real risk of extinguishing the lives of him and his 19 crew members. The script by Ken Nolan and Eric Warren Singer is a slow burn, gradually revealing details that make us care about these men as we see their lives and struggles outside of work. Jennifer Connelly (an Oscar winner for her role in 2001's A Beautiful Mind) matches Brolin blow-for-blow as Marsh's long-suffering but loving wife Amanda, a strong-willed woman who bristles at coming in a distant second to her husband's addiction to his job. Miles Teller (Whiplash), Taylor

Professor Marston and the Wonder Women ★★★ If you're one of the many people who enjoyed this past summer's breakout surprise, Wonder Woman, then you'll likely be absolutely fascinated by writer/director Angela Robinson's stranger-than-fiction, R-rated origin tale of William Moulton Marston (The Fate of the Furious' Luke Evans), the ousted Harvard psychologist and little-known inventor of the polygraph. Better known as the creator of the comic book adventures of the Amazon Princess, he did manage to sneak his lie detector into his more famous creation in the form of Diana Prince's Lasso of Truth, which got him into hot water with '40s-era decency leagues for his comics' overt bondage imagery and "sexual perversity." If only they knew what was going on in Marston's home. Robinson, who's been toiling in television for the past decade while directing episodes of The L Word and True Blood, makes a handsome return to the big screen (Portlandia cinematographer Bryce Fortner bathes the film's Lowell locations in a warm golden hue) after an inauspicious start directing pictures such as Herbie Fully Loaded. She employs the Hollywood style of a bygone era, rich in period detail and fashion, to normalize the true story of Marston's secretive polyamorous romance with his two muses, live-in loves and mothers to his children, wife Elizabeth Marston (The Gift's Rebecca Hall) and their lover, Olive Byrne (Fifty Shades Darker's Bella Heathcote). BDSM has never seemed so mainstream—but be sure to leave your young Wonder Woman fans at home. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Suburbicon ★1/2 Think of Joel and Ethan Coen's previously unproduced script for Suburbicon as their decades-old dry run for Fargo, filled with half-formed ideas such as protagonist Gardner Lodge (a miscast Matt Damon), a proto-version of William H. Macy's Jerry Lundegaard. It seems futile that anyone would have wanted to dust off this early draft of a subpar, '50s-era Coen caper and spruce it up for production, especially by forcing a straight-faced race drama on its fringes, but that's exactly what George Clooney and his co-writing/co-producing partner Grant Heslov have done. They likely thought they were being clever by focusing on Damon's adulterer, who hires a couple of idiots to kill his wheelchair-bound wife (Julianne Moore) so that he can have relations with her able-bodied twin sister (Moore again), all while he condemns the perfectly nice black family who moved in next door. Ho-ho! Despite how great it looks (it's been expertly lensed by Robert Elswit, who shot Clooney's vastly superior directing effort, Good Night, and Good Luck) or sounds (composer Alexandre Desplat more or less approximates the musical style Carter Burwell employs in countless collaborations with the Coens), this film is a tonal mess. And there's no getting around the fact that while the Coens can do retro lunacy in their sleep (see: Hail, Caesar!), Clooney is in way over his head. A dazzlingly hilarious turn by Oscar Isaac as a seedy insurance investigator only accentuates how little else works. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

GEMINI RISING Macklemore moves out of retrograde and back into the spotlight with Gemini, his first solo venture in 12 years since parting ways with his longtime partner Ryan Lewis. The Grammy-winning rapper (and Gemini) embraces his astrological sign for an album that showcases his versatility and quick-witted energy with multiple collaborations, such as the eccentric, pulsing jam "Marmalade" with rising artist Lil Yachty, as well as the thoughtful reminiscence of "Good Old Days" with Kesha. All signs of the zodiac can unite for Macklemore, who brings his beats to the House of Blues on Nov. 14. / Hannah McKennett

Edited by Julia Aparicio

BRING TO LIGHT Art, math and science collide in a digital sensory experience at XYZT: A Journey in 4 Dimensions. Created by French artists and computer scientists Adrien Mondot and Claire Bardainne, this interactive exhibit features nature-inspired holographic landscapes that imagine four dimensions: horizontal (X), vertical (Y), depth (Z) and time (T). Blur the line between physical and virtual as you step into a darkened gallery and manipulate beams of light with nothing more than the movement of your body. Experience the future at Peabody Essex Museum through April 22. / Brenna Donovan

SENSORY OVERLOAD

Besides being one of the most mouth-watering events on Boston's social calendar, Taste of Perkins, a benefit for Perkins School for the Blind, is also one of the most eye-opening.

Offering guests the opportunity to understand what it's like to experience food, wine and beer the way a blind person does, the evening features blindfolded tastings in Dwight Hall, as well as sensory exploration stations and superb schmoozing throughout the Gothic corridors of the Howe Building.

Spied among the crowd: Blonde cutie Kelsey Grousbeck and her gorgeous mom, Corinne, the achingly lovely Jeannette Hsu-McSweeney, the super-elegant Mona Jomaa, produce pusher Olgo Russo, the unfairly attractive Tina and Randy Kinard, freedom fighter Rachael Solem, dazzling duo Oz Mondejar and John Verlinden, the eternally upbeat Mary-Catherine Deibel, exquisite painter Nancy Walton, brunette beauty Andrea Brooks (fresh off a plane from London) and stunning trustee Katherine Chapman Stemberg (who went straight from the party to Logan to catch a flight to Venice). The evening was balmy enough that guests could enjoy a breath of fresh air in the courtyard, while the silent auction was impressive enough that several people bid like drunken sailors.

"Those ginger cookies smell so good it should be illegal," observed one guest, while another mused, "'Do Not Touch' must be the scariest thing to read in braille."

The bar, meanwhile, was set up in the chapel, prompting someone to observe that, "It may be blasphemous, but the wine's a lot better than what most churches serve for Communion and you can go back for more."

A LEG UP

Talk about pulling yourself up by your bootstraps. Back on My Feet—a national nonprofit that combats homelessness through an innovative program combining running, group support and employment and housing services—celebrated its gala at the Renaissance Boston Waterfront Hotel.

The party began with cocktails and continued with a dinner program emceed by comedian Jimmy Tingle and honoring volunteer and radio personality Sue Brady Hartigan. However, the evening's real star—and the best feel-good story of any charity event in recent memory—was co-honoree Norma Heath, whose experience with the organization helped her go from a life of homelessness, substance abuse and prostitution to graduating from Harvard last May.

There to cheer her on were such friends and fans as WBZ babe Lisa Hughes, fashion designer David Josef and his handsome husband, Danny Forrester, Dress for Success co-founder Nancy Schneider, Hartigan's super-hot husband, Craig, tech guru David Cutler, jewelry designer extraordinaire Pattee Lebner, blond beauties Courtney Forrester and Elena Matlack, the super-suave Glenn Kelley, dashing marathoner Wayne Levy, and a therapist who did a telephone consult in the handicapped stall of the men's room.

"I bought this dress for 12 bucks at Target," said one guest. "If you have a match, it's going up in flames."

However, the evening's best line came from the man who told a female friend who was threatening to slip off her pumps, "If drag queens can wear heels all night, so can you."

TYIN' ON THE FEEDBAG

It was like Top Chef, Boston Edition, when Share Our Strength hosted the Harvest Dinner to benefit No Kid Hungry at the Boston Center for the Arts.

The event, emceed by TV glamazon Jenny Johnson (and three days before her wedding, no less), honored James Beard award-winner Tony Maws and Cooking Matters volunteer Sheila Berkus. The Cyclorama never looked better, decked out in elaborately set orange-and-white tables, while the cooking stations on the periphery of the room looked like the gleaming set of a brand new show on the Food Network. For the chefs involved, the evening is more fun than many food events because rather than churning out a single dish for grazing hordes, they get to create a multi-course menu for a table of 10, with whom they also get to interact.

Among the toques in attendance: Cultivar's Mary Dumont, Benedetto's Michael Pagliarini, Townsman's Matt Jennings, Bar Mezzana's Colin Lynch and Outlook's Tatiana Rosana. The lucky crew ingesting the fruits of their labor included Chestnut Hillions Nancy Adams and Scott Schoen, fashion plate Adele Chang and her handsome other half, Eddie Yoon, the startlingly gorgeous Stephanie Spector and her dashing dude, Brian, restaurateur Brian Lesser and his stunning wife, Jana, auto mogul Charles Ribakoff and the flawless Patty, the hale and hearty Frank Wisneski and event planner Lynn Dale, tech giant Niraj Shah and the lovely Jill, and so on and so forth.

The evening's best exchange:

"I'm only responsible for one husband per night."

"Oh, well tell me when it's mine so I can go out and get wasted." ◆

AGAINST THE ODDS

I ALWAYS ADMIRE AN UNDERDOG STORY. While Channel 7 (WHDH-TV) has been covering its fair share of them during the past year, the station itself has been facing some long odds. It lost its NBC affiliate on Jan. 1, and numerous reporters have departed amid the shuffle. But the network stayed near the top of the ratings after moving to nearly all-news programming, and one of the biggest changes has been the introduction of a 9 pm newscast co-anchored by our cover subject, Jadiann Thompson. In these pages, she dishes with Jonathan Soroff on her life as a Boston transplant, chasing wildfires and an on-air gaffe she can't escape.

And if there's one thing we all can't escape, it's the holidays. Scott Kearnan checks in with four restaurateurs who reveal some of their favorite festive recipes as well as some decor tricks that help them set the table with style. Elsewhere in our Holiday Entertaining issue, Marissa Angelone rounds up some hostess gifts, Julia Aparicio taps into a local wine-curation service and we explore a few different items to spice up the season, from a habanero and pumpkin cocktail to a beloved locally made seasoning blend that was developed 150 years ago. A business that's lasted that long? Talk about beating the odds.

BETTER BAGELS LEADS A RETAIL WAVE INTO THE SEAPORT

SEAPORT

83 Seaport Blvd.
Co-owners Sam Harden and James Grimes always wanted a bagel shop in Boston, and after years of doing pop-ups and distributing to various wholesalers across town, they finally opened a brick-and-mortar spot. Among the multitude of doughy offerings and a bevy of accoutrements, bagel buffs will discover the company's hard-to-find flavors such as egg and pumpernickel—as well a lot of local flavor that's much-needed in the up-and-coming neighborhood. betterbagelsboston.com

YOTEL BOSTON
65 Seaport Blvd.
This micro-hotel opened this summer with rooms—also known as cabins—as small as 152 square feet. But there's a large amount of options when it comes to Bostonians enjoying the futuristic building, which is the chain's second U.S. location. Local DJs take over the rooftop lounge on Wednesdays and Sundays, Louie Bello croons in the lobby lounge on Thursday evenings, while the Boston Buddha (Andrew Kelley) offers meditation classes on Mondays. yotel.com

THE GRAND 58 Seaport Blvd.
The latest nightclub from the Big Night Entertainment Group, which also opened the adjacent Scorpion Bar, puts as much of an emphasis on visual effects as the audio elements. The 12,000-square-foot space contains a 70-foot LED wall and a kinetic light system as well as a Funktion-One sound system for guest DJs to blast the beats. thegrandboston.com

EQUINOX
27 Northern Ave.
The fitness facility's fifth Boston location might wow you with its water views, but the other amenities aren't too shabby either. A spa, Juice Press shop and apparel store are all part of the Equinox lure. And don't miss a class that uses a weighted jump rope and is only held at select sites—including this one. equinox.com

SEAPORT BARBERS
51 Northern Ave.
This new biz from Tweed Barbers' Andrew Alicea is open seven days a week, offering clients a complimentary shampoo and a free beverage upon arrival—all the better to let your hair down. Only products from Blind Barber make the cut as master barbers offer haircuts, beard trims, facials and hair coloring. seopartbarbers.com

Pop Quiz CRACK THE CASE

It's about to be Nutcracker season in Boston. But your options for viewing the holiday favorite this year go beyond the traditional Tchaikovsky-scored ballet. Here's a sampling of just some of The Nutcracker performances you can catch in town. Treat yourself to something from the Land of Sweets if you match each Nutcracker image to the correct show. / Matt Martinelli

1. ___ Boston Ballet artistic director Mikko Nissinen reimagined the family-friendly ballet with new sets, costumes and refreshed choreography five years ago. The company runs The Nutcracker performances from Nov. 24 through Dec. 31 at the Boston Opera House.

2. ___ Billed as a contemporary take on the classic, The Hip-Hop Nutcracker drops a few of the characters into a nightclub and swaps out the Land of Sweets for 1980s Brooklyn. Featuring an electric violinist and plenty of break dancing, the national tour stops at Boch Shubert Theatre for the first time on Dec. 21-23.

3. ___ Anthony Williams' Urbon Nutcracker hits the stage for the 17th year, mixing tap, hip-hop, flamenco dance and more, while adding in some beats from Duke Ellington. Broadway dancer and Dorchester native Sean Fiedler rejoins the show, which incorporates iconic Boston landmarks such as the Public Garden and Top of the Hub on stage at John Hancock Hall on Dec. 15-28.

4. ___ Moscow Ballet's Great Russion Nutcracker features dancers from Tchaikovsky's home country when it stops in town during the 25th anniversary of its North American tour. A 60-foot Christmas tree, 10-foot tall puppets and 100 costumes are all part of the two performances on Dec. 3 at the Orpheum Theatre.

WORTH ITS SALT

A NEW SPOT INJECTS MEXICAN FLAVOR INTO THE BACK BAY

CITRUS & SALT
142 Berkeley St , Boston
citrusandsaltboston.com

Jason Santos is not afraid to be colorful. From his signature blue hair to the painted pink floors of his forthcoming restaurant Citrus & Salt, the celebrity chef and restaurateur's aesthetic is anything but boring. And now, after opening the New Orleans-themed Buttermilk & Bourbon in Back Bay earlier this year, Santos is transforming his now-shuttered Back Bay Harry's into a Mexican concept, set to open Nov. 21.

"Just like with myself in life, I'm not taking anything too seriously. We're definitely taking some culinary creativity and creative licenses here," Santos says. "I wanted it to be a fish-driven menu, a kind of funky version of street food—keeping true to the authenticity of it, but then putting our own twist on it."

Santos says the inspiration he discovered on a recent trip south of the border is apparent in every aspect of the restaurant, from floors covered in a mosaic of swirling painted flowers to a succulent-filled wall and a back room with neon graffiti and a Santeria-inspired shrine.

"When you go to Mexico City, there's flowers in bright bursts everywhere. I love the idea of all white, and then the pop of color from the floor up," says general manager Colleen Hagerty. "Mexican street art was a huge influence. Every spare wall in the city is covered with beautiful murals and patterns."

As for the menu, small plates will riff on traditional dishes with inventive twists, including grilled street corn rolled in a puree of Flamin' Hot Cheetos dust, smoked mayonnaise and cotija cheese. The drink list will also host different takes on classic margaritas, such as a seasonal coconut caramel margarita served with a salted caramel popsicle in it.

"I think that with both the food and the space it's really all about not taking it too seriously or too literally," Hagerty says. "It's just about having fun with it."

With a dining area that seats about 130, a colorful menu centered around coastal dishes and a rustic raw bar, Santos believes the space will carve out a niche in Back Bay.

"I want it to be super approachable and I want it to be fun," Santos says. "I want people to leave and be like 'Holy crap! That was a ton of fun!' It's a place people can hang out, and I want the ambience to be very welcoming."

Good Eats: Two to Taco

The double mesquite doors of Lolita Cocina & Tequila Bar's new Fort Point spot lead to a moody interior that's steeped in Old Spanish style. The same dramatic flair is infused in the pulpo ajo taco—all at once salty, creamy and spicy. Only available at the Summer Street location, the taco served in a housemade flour tortilla features seared octopus, jalapeno crema, cilantro and crispy shallots that zing with a spice blend. "I was visiting the Deep Ellum neighborhood in Dallas a few weeks before we opened and had killer octopus tacos at Revolver Taco Lounge," says Tom Berry, culinary director for COJE, which also operates Back Bay's Lolita and the newly opened Matadora in Woburn among other Boston hotspots such as Yvonne's. "That's when we decided we had to have a Lolita version, especially considering how much octopus is a hit at our sister restaurants." / Nathan Tavares

Drink of the Moment
STOWAWAY

PRICE: $13

INGREDIENTS: Mezcal, pickled pumpkin, habanero, oloroso and lime

FLAVOR: This fall addition to the cocktail lineup from Waypoint's Mira Stella brings a bit of everything: sweetness from roasted pumpkin—pickled overnight with rosemary, juniper berries and black pepper—and a sherry with notes of caramel, smoke thanks to a full-bodied mezcal and heat from just two dashes of habanero, plus a hint of brightness from fresh lime. You may not be someone who eagerly waits to throw back pumpkin spice lattes, but give this one a try. Says beverage director Seth Freidus, "Any margarita drinker would get on board."

PAIR IT WITH: More gourds—'tis the season. Check out the pumpkin-topped pizza ($15) with herbed mascarpone, fried sage and smoked hazelnuts or the blue crab and pickled pumpkin salad ($18) with farro, apples and radishes.

ALL ABOUT ABSINTHE: Waypoint stocks more than 20 anise-flavored spirits from the U.S., Switzerland, France and beyond. Explains Freidus: "We do a traditional set up. We drip water from taps over sugar to dilute, sweeten and louche the absinthe." The bar also shows off the selection in a rotating seasonal cobbler; at the moment, guests can try out a concoction featuring Golden Delicious and Granny Smith apples roasted with honey and Korean chili flakes, fresh lemon juice and sherry poured over crushed ice.

KINDRED SPIRIT: Bartenders whipped up another fall-centric addition that features Tenneyson absinthe. The rum-spiked Daily Grind mixes a housemade coffee liqueur with demrara sugar, toasted spice and grapefruit. / Sarah Hogman

GOULD MIND

As the fifth child in a family of six kids, Dana Gould wanted to be a comedian since he was a teenager. With stints on hit TV shows like Porks and Rec and Seinfeld, his hit podcast The Dana Gould Hour and live stand-up performances, the Hopedale native can always be counted on to tickle funny bones. We talked stand-up with the humorist before his run at Laugh Boston on Nov. 16-18. / Cathryn Haight

FAVORITE SUBJECT TO JOKE ABOUT? I always just sort of talk about what's going on in my life, and fortunately—or unfortunately—my life is eventful enough that it keeps it entertaining. I talk about pretty much whatever's going on with me. I talk about politics, but I'm not too political. I talk about my personal life, and I've been accused of being too personal. [Laughs.] So I try to strike a nice balance. I like everybody to have a good time. I'm not there to lecture anyone.

DO YOU HAVE ANY PRE-STAND-UP RITUALS? Usually about an hour and a half before the show I turn off my phone. I turn off the TV and the radio and sit down with [a] set list. It's actually very pleasant. It's a nice sort of meditative exercise.

BIGGEST COMEDY INFLUENCE? A combination of George Carlin and Albert Brooks. George Carlin taught me how to write material, and then Albert Brooks taught me how to make the material irrelevant. It's really about the effect on the stage and the attitude and the energy that you bring to whatever you are talking about. That's sort of the algorithm of what I try to do.

WHAT IS YOUR MOST MEMORABLE PERFORMANCE? The weirdest performance I ever did was a private show at a super, super successful movie producer's house in Aspen, Colorado, in which every single person in the audience was super, super famous. And the show went really well, and from that show I got cast in like four movies and a television series. So it was a pretty successful show. [Laughs.] Because of that show, I was able to buy my parents a house, so I would say it was pretty good.

GRAPES TO GLASS

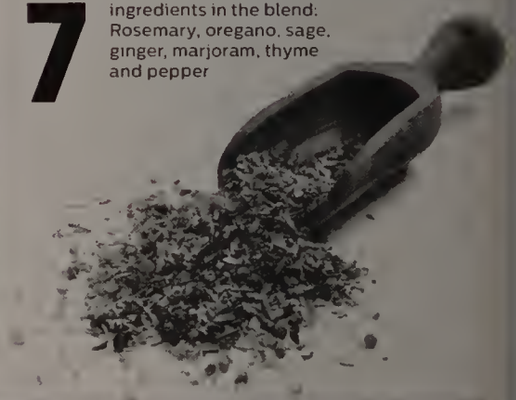
theupperglass.com

As brewers and distillers open tasting rooms around town with increasing frequency, it can be hard for oenophiles to get some local love. But Upper Glass, launched by Charlestown's David Garlough in May, is uncorking a different way to put a Boston spin on the wine scene, tapping the city's top sommeliers to curate small assortments of standout bottles.

"Everybody loves to get wine, but honestly for most people it's hard to know if you're picking something great," Garlough says. "It's a pretty affordable way to give someone a bit of wine discovery, wines that they wouldn't find on their own or wouldn't think to choose on their own."

Each month, Upper Glass partners with an expert from a local restaurant to brainstorm a theme and put together a collection from artisanal winemakers. Every package ($80) is delivered with four bottles and a booklet that includes tasting notes from the featured sommelier, a role that's been filled in past collections by Bistro du Midi's Todd Lipman, Puritan and Company's Peter Nelson and Brewer's Fork's Kari Cooney. In preparation for the holidays, Upper Glass will feature festive picks ripe for dinner parties and hostess gifts with its Party Pairings and Spectacular Sparklers boxes. Garlough teamed up with Kelsey McCallan at Catalyst for the latter curation, having her pick her 10 favorite sparkling wines before using an untraditional method for making the final selection.



"We went and we had a party. We let everyone taste all 10 and had all of the guests vote on their favorite ones," Garlough says. "We're finalizing the selections right now, but they're just fantastic, so we're pretty excited. That's a great one for the holiday season." / Julia Aparicio

Bell's On!

Although it's described as a blend for all types of meat and fish, Bell's Seasoning is specifically linked with Thanksgiving in the memories of many. Founded by William G. Bell three years after Thanksgiving was declared a national holiday, the mixture has not changed since it was created in Quincy Market Place in 1867 with spices originally milled in the North End and sold in a can. As the company marks a big anniversary, we rang up some other numbers on Bell's. / Matt Martinelli

SPICED UP

Need a little more spice? Uncommon Feasts, a Brookline boutique caterer is teaming up with Curio Spice Co to sell an Uncommon Chai tea mix with Sri Lankan cinnamon, bay leaf, black tea and more spices. The $8 kit has enough for 12 cups and is available starting this month at Formaggio Kitchen in the South End.

ANIMAL LOVERS EXPLORE THE CONNECTIONS BETWEEN ALL CREATURES

Tamed & Untamed* by Sy Montgomery and Elizabeth Marshall Thomas
Published by Chelsea Green, 204 pages, $18

LABELING THE READER—AS WELL AS themselves—as "a midsize ape known as a human," Sy Montgomery and Elizabeth Marshall Thomas are upfront about their attitude to Homo sapiens in their collection of essays exploring the animal world. Sure, we read books and drive cars unlike other apes, but we share much in common with cats, birds and fish. Indeed, they often surpass us in sensory or intuitive ways—a dog's sense of smell is up to 200,000 times more acute than ours.

In one of the book's short yet delicious science-filled chapters, Marshall Thomas writes of a moment when her mood suddenly, unaccountably, turned from sunny to sad, and she noticed her dog also became tense next to her. She soon discovered that her husband simultaneously met a man in a store who was the ambulance driver after their daughter was in a bad accident. Marshall Thomas believes that her husband's grief was transmitted via ESP to the dog and then to her. The authors, who were both longtime contributors to The Boston Globe's Tamed/Untamed column, use similar tales to show how our relationships and communications with various creatures, though wordless, go deep.

Mindful connections are thrillingly described throughout the book, as when Cornell University researcher Katy Payne—potential prey—held still for 12 hours as a lion held a tight gaze on her. Seemingly respecting her admirable equilibrium, the great beast let her be. Through more than 50 stories, Montgomery and Marshall Thomas bring to light that animals wild and tame have kinships and reciprocities with us "midsize apes."

FROM PAGE 34: Rats understand some human words. They easily learn their names and will come when called. They can fetch, walk a tightrope, and sit up, among other tricks. Marion has taught several of her rats to "play basketball," eagerly carrying a ball toward a mounted hoop, standing up, and then pushing the ball through the hoop with their tiny, dexterous hands. ◆

TWO CITIES: Porto offers serenity along the riverbanks while Lisbon displays architectural beauty

EXPLORE PORTUGUESE PARADISE IN LISBON AND PORTO

As your plane touches down in Portugal, you can gaze out the window at the vast horizon of the seaside Belém district. You might dream of the bravery of intrepid 15th-century Portuguese sailors who explored that sea long ago. Many of those sailors are immortalized in the soaring Monument to the Discoveries, which is one of the must-see spots on your present-day exploration to Lisbon and Porto.

But there's plenty more to discover beyond that monument, so lace up your shoes and head for the hills. From the center of Lisbon, hop on the number 15 bus and proceed to the pastry capital of Portugal. Belém offers fascinating sites like the Belém Tower as well as the ornate Monastery of Jerónimos, both imbued with Moorish architectural elements. You can't miss out on Pastéis de Belém bakery's pastel de nata tarts, which owe their custardy, yolk-based fillings to the tradition of using egg whites to starch liturgical garments. At just under $2 each, it's a pretty sweet deal indeed.

Myriad other tart iterations are sprinkled throughout the city, and you can learn about some of the best on a Secret Food Tour, which also includes insights on some other indulgences—inexpensive, locally produced Super Bock beer, Ginjinha sour cherry liqueur, cured meats and cheeses and wines for which Portugal's Douro Valley is renowned. There's also a little food for thought during a stroll through the historical Mouraria district, with traces of a medieval wall and beautiful tiled facades. But that's not the only art - Mouraria is also the birthplace of Fado music, and there are plenty of restaurants to catch free performances. Get some context on the tunes at the Museu do Fado in the Alfama district before you see a show.

The oldest district in Lisbon, Alfama's labyrinth of cobbled streets and ancient homes provides a bit of quieter sanctuary--especially when it comes to boutique hotels like Palácio Belmonte, built on the surrounding walls of Castle São Jorge. The former palace is the oldest in Lisbon, with Roman walls, 18th-century tiles and antique rugs and paintings. With 11 suites, a reservation can be hard to come by (and not cheap), but a trek up to the property affords breathtaking views of the Tagus River and the patio cafe is a great spot for an affordable bite and people-watching. Splurge-worthy meals are a short walk down the hill in Alfama at Chapitô à Mesa, part of a circus-arts school with three concepts: coal-grilled items on the terrace, a snack house and an upscale restaurant. Or you can head to Bairro do Avillez, where Portugal's celebrity chef José Avillez puts a modern spin on classic Portuguese dishes.

Of course, no meal is complete without wine—or port. During an essential visit to Porto, sip the singular sweet spirit when wandering the Vila Nova de Gaia neighborhood, where for 10-12 euros many of the cellars offer tours with three pours. Croft's is particularly tasty, and you'll enjoy generous samples of reserve, 10-year tawny and Pink, the world's first rosé port wine. The walk up the hill may be a bit challenging, so grab a cab or opt to scoot for some sightseeing around in a tuk-tuk, a small motorized cart that zips and zooms through the city streets and crowds. It's the most fun golf cart ride you'll ever have, along with insightful commentary from guides like Fabio Faria, who'll drive all the way up to Cathedral Square for a bird's-eye view of the red-roofed city before meandering past Livraria Lello, the bookstore J.K. Rowling used as inspiration for Harry Potter's Hogwarts library.

But the magic doesn't have to end there—all-day cruises with Douro Acima offer vineyard views to the wineland district of Regua and back. Those with an afternoon to spare can sail up and down the heart of Porto in a traditional pinhão boat and admire the soaring spans that connect both banks of the river—and spy the teenage boys who take bets and bribes here before a long plunge into the water from the top. You'll want to take the plunge and get to Portugal, too. ◆

DEWY DUO DEBUT

FIELD & VINE BREATHES SUBTLE FIRE INTO FARM-TO-TABLE CLICHES

VISITING A BRAND-NEW INDIE restaurant can generate a frisson of anticipation: Will it be good, possibly exciting, maybe even amazing? The stakes feel higher when first-time operators are involved: You're hoping for their success, but you know how unforgiving the business can be—even to veteran restaurateurs. They did a Kickstarter? Hoo-boy, that means a short runway. So it's a relief to discover that Field & Vine—a new farm-to-table restaurant in Somerville's Union Square from a pair of novice, crowdfunded owners—is mostly stupendous.

Their room is small, spare and handsomely modest with copious plants and rustic, reclaimed-wood decor that evoke old barns and winter woods. There are about 30 seats at tables, another seven at the dining counter surrounding the open kitchen, whence heavenly aromas waft from a wood-fired grill. It's a charming, enticing tableau from the first step inside.

The menu from chef/co-owner Andrew Brady treads familiar tropes—shareable plates, local farms and fisheries, sustainable sourcing—yet manages to deliver consistently delicious, occasionally transporting food, starting with a brilliant basket of focaccia ($5) with spreads like a fantastic housemade butter and lemon-garlic tahini spread. Local raw oysters ($3 each), Sippicans from Marion and Beach Points from Barnstable one night, are impeccable. A ceviche of the delectable, underused local fish tautog ($11) brings novel chunky texture and tart/hot accents of sumac and purplish isot pepper for spooning onto vivid paprika crackers. Yellowfin tuna crudo ($14) shows similar fine knife-work, finds the Goldilocks crudo-temperature zone, and boasts vibrant accents of green apple, fresh jalapeño and teeny ebony nigella seeds. This is a great small raw bar.

Vegetable dishes are routinely wondrous enough that certain vegetarians may consider this an occasion spot. Multicolored grilled beets ($13) punched up with copious basil feature insistent wood-smoke flavor plus a hint of acid from roasted pears atop a chewy base of mild halloumi. Delicata squash ($12), sliced and gently roasted, feels rich enough to serve as an entree, with its dottings of ricotta, grilled scallions, halved hazelnuts and the tart spice hit of preserved-lemon za'atar. Parsley and radicchio salad ($12) is a model of gorgeous restraint: exemplary greens, big pignoli, chunks of superb, mild French feta, the whap of lemon and garlic, and lots of chewy lardons of long-cured, crisply rendered bacon. Crispy potatoes ($8) have the advertised crunch and interesting accents of celery and pickled peppers, but one wishes for a less faint flavor of tuna or anchovies in its lemony tonnato. Raw, vertically sliced radishes ($13) take a spin away from French breakfast by subbing creamy, sherry-spiked chicken liver pâté for butter: brilliant.

Animal proteins offer similarly unfussy preparations that yield emphatic flavors, like skewers of ginger/garlic-marinated, wood-grilled chicken thighs ($15)—maybe the best souvlaki in town—as well as a generous pile of littleneck clams ($16) in a simple broth with knotty, crunchy croutons. There's a whiff of Southeast Asia in a slab of hake steamed in turmeric leaves ($16) in another fine, lambent broth. Duck confit salad ($17) takes a crescent-shaped pile of greens subtly dressed in black walnut vinaigrette and layers them atop a sensationally rich, delicate duck confit, plus earthy lentils du puy and a few grapes for crisp sweetness. Smoked sausage ($17) of beef and pork tops a humble casserole of heirloom beans and charred cabbage, but its smoky, savory, fatty flavors somehow add up to something greater. If there's a minor bust here, it's a gorgeous hand-cut beef tartare ($14) that promises fierce Vietnamese accents of nuoc cham and fried shallots, but mutes them by blending nuoc cham into an aioli and overdressing the beef with it, delivering disappointingly mild results.

Even the unassuming desserts hide depths, like the lavender accent in the chocolate pot de crème ($8) and the crème anglaise in place of the milk in milk and cookies ($6) of chocolate chip, lemon shortbread and (fabulous) spicy chocolate chili. The beverage program features a few amari and aperitifs like Uncouth Butternut Squash vermouth ($12), a non-annoying way to get more pumpkin flavor into your drinking, and a short, nerdy list of northeastern-U.S. beers ($4-$14). Wines are mostly Old World (notably French) and quite fairly priced. Nine by-the-glass options ($11-$14) and a 36-deep bottle list ($35-$87, most under $55) feature many fascinating, unusual choices. One memorable bottle was a 2013 Laurent Cazottes Marcottes Braucol ($48), a striking braucol/duras blend from southwestern France with soft tannins and a heady, raisiny aroma akin to dried currants. This modest, idiosyncratic list, with its emphasis on sustainable, often biodynamic wines, serves as an apt foil to the kitchen's unpretentious yet frequently surprising food. Credit co-owner/general manager Sara Markey, who also exemplifies the front-of-house service ethos: bubbly and enthusiastic, with an unstudied Somervillian informality.

It can be easy nowadays to feel a certain cynicism about farm-to-table, when even McDonald's has built a campaign on it, and wariness about risking one's hard-earned dining dollars on a pair of newcomers whose business was built on a few pop-ups and some catering experience. Field & Vine demonstrates why one should occasionally suppress those darker thoughts. Sometimes a shopworn concept, when executed with refinement, earnestness about sourcing, and a big dollop of workmanlike humility, can yield truly lovely, memorable results. ◆

Q: IS ULTHERAPY THE BEST WAY TO TIGHTEN MY SKIN?

A: It depends on the condition of your skin. Ultherapy and RF (radio frequency) skin tightening are both very effective, but it depends on the degree of laxity present. Ultherapy works at a deeper level and is used when more sagging is present. Ultherapy can be done at any age, but usually is not needed until we reach our mid-30s and older.

Ultherapy is a safe, non-invasive procedure that uses ultrasound energy to lift and tighten skin. It's very effective for the face, neck, jowls, and chest. Ultherapy delivers focused ultrasound energy deep down to the foundational layer of the skin without disrupting the surface. This energy stimulates the growth of fresh, new collagen and strengthens weak collagen. The results become visible over 2-3 months as tired collagen is replaced and new collagen builds, gradually lifting, smoothing and tightening skin.

TAKE THREE

MARVEL'S GOD OF THUNDER EMERGES AS ITS NEW KING OF COMEDY

EVEN THOUGH HE'S AN A-LIST MEMBER OF the mighty Avengers, Thor's first two films aren't exactly the most beloved of the 16 previous movies in Disney's ever-expanding Marvel Cinematic Universe. But with the latest installment headlined by Australia's Chris Hemsworth, that's about to change.

Marvel's God of Thunder was a bit of a stiff in Kenneth Branagh's Thor (2011) and its little-liked follow-up, Alan Taylor's Thor: The Dark World (2013); the character's been best used as comic relief in Joss Whedon's two team-based blockbusters, 2012's The Avengers and 2015's Avengers: Age of Ultron. Still, even Whedon couldn't quite figure out what to do with Thor other than toss off witty bon mots between bouts of swinging his enchanted hammer, Mjolnir.

Near the start of Thor: Ragnarok, that ancient weapon is casually destroyed by Hela, the Goddess of Death (his heretofore-unmentioned and villainous older sister, gamely played by a vamping Cate Blanchett) and the warrior is forced to rely on more of those wits.

Thankfully, New Zealand's Taika Waititi has brought his own estimable powers to this film. The director and actor, known for his comic oddities like vampire mockumentary What We Do in the Shadows, loses little of his offbeat sensibilities in his transition to big-budget, franchise filmmaking. Mind you, the movie still features the expected super-powered brawls and an effects-driven climax stuffed with CGI overkill, but the focus in this film is on humor.

Waititi's emphasis on improvisation allows Hemsworth to stretch his legs beyond the confines of a fairly boilerplate script credited to a handful of writers. The tale is structured as a buddy comedy—only it pairs Hemsworth with a rotating roster of perfectly mismatched sparring partners to alternately banter with and battle.

He's joined once again by his adopted brother Loki (typically puckish Tom Hiddleston) as the film ties up The Dark World's loose ends in a hilarious scene that features an unbilled cameo by a Major Hollywood Star. Beyond his treacherous sibling, he also teams up with Valkyrie (Tessa Thompson of Creed)—an alcoholic scavenger with secret ties to Asgard, Thor's homeworld—and Korg, a soft-spoken, Kiwi-accented warrior made of rock, a computer-generated creation who's voiced with dim-witted soul by Waititi himself. The best pairing, however, is the one that's been spoiled by the movie's ad campaign: The match-up of Thor and his fellow Avenger, the Incredible Hulk, who are forced to face off in a gladiatorial duel for the ages on the distant planet of Sakaar.

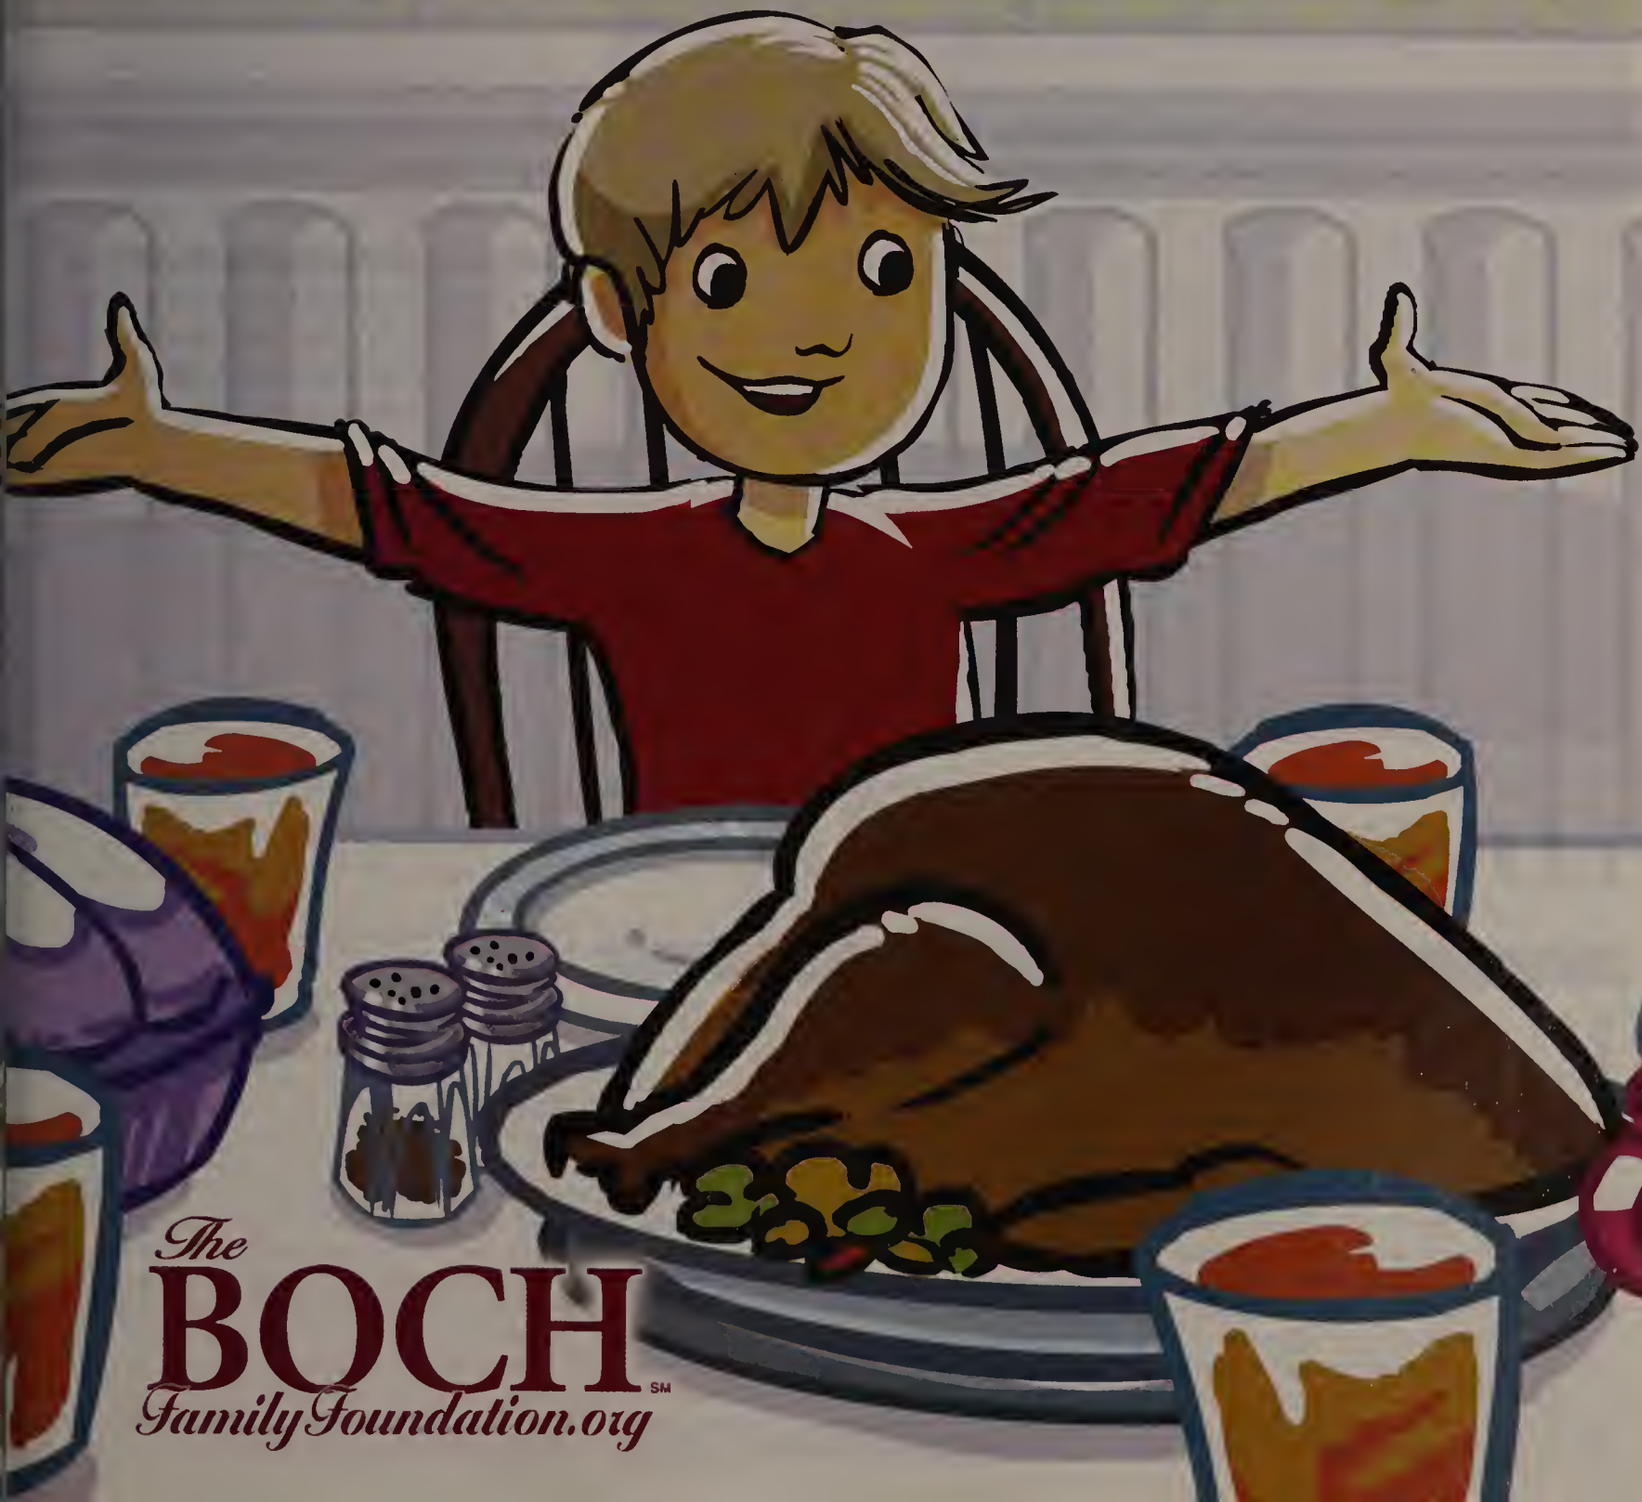
Waititi's emphasis on improvisation allows Hemsworth to stretch his legs.

THOR ★★★½

Starring Chris Hemsworth, Tom Hiddleston, Cate Blanchett, Idris Elba, Jeff Goldblum, Tessa Thompson, Karl Urban, Mark Ruffalo, Benedict Cumberbatch, Taika Waititi, Rachel House, Clancy Brown, Tadanobu Asano, Ray Stevenson, Zachary Levi and Anthony Hopkins. Written by Eric Pearson, based on a story by Craig Kyle, Christopher Yost and Pearson and the comics by Stan Lee, Larry Lieber and Jack Kirby. Directed by Taika Waititi. At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

The nearly 9-foot-tall Hulk is again played in a motion-captured performance by Mark Ruffalo, who also appears on camera as Bruce Banner, the monster's human counterpart. For reasons that aren't entirely clear, he's been stuck in Hulk form since disappearing near the end of Age of Ultron. Whatever the cause, the two years spent inside his green skin has done wonders for his vocabulary. Waititi and his writing team have given us the most fully formed rendition of the not-so-jolly green giant yet seen onscreen, an ill-tempered hero who's as petulant as Thor is vain—and Ruffalo and Hemsworth make a great comic duo.

If only they could have remained on Sakaar, an alien world seemingly spawned from a 1980s sci-fi action flick, complete with gloriously gaudy production design by Dan Hennah (Peter Jackson's Hobbit trilogy) and Ra Vincent (What We Do in the Shadows), and a retro-synth score by Marvel newbie and longtime Devo frontman Mark Mothersbaugh. This trash-heap of a planet continues the trend of recent Marvel films to move beyond nondescript locations and into the fantastical, psychedelic landscapes that early Marvel Comics artist and Thor co-creator Jack Kirby was known for developing.



But these Marvel pictures do have their templates to follow, and so Thor finds a way off the strange planet he's been imprisoned on after the indignity of losing both his hammer and his flowing tresses. That's right, not only has our hero been captured by the hedonistic ruler of Sakaar, the Grandmaster (hilariously played by Jeff Goldblum), and forced into combat, but he's also suffered the indignity of having his hair cut against his will.

But Thor's no Samson, and he needs neither hammer nor hair to find his way back home to Asgard, where he and his fellow "Revengers" (Loki, Valkyrie and the Hulk) will attempt to liberate his people from the clutches of Hela and the Ragnarok prophesy, which told of the destruction of his civilization.

If that sounds a bit dark, worry not. As game as all of the actors are, Waititi emerges as this film's MVP. Capitalizing on Hemsworth's comic chops, the Kiwi auteur puts the performer through hugely entertaining indignities with an inspired sense of timing and technique. Like Loki and Thor rolled into one, Waititi's both the trickster and the hero that this series so desperately needed. ◆

LOVE STORY

HALL OF FAME SINGER SPREADS HOLIDAY CHEER WITH HER HIT-MAKING VOICE

EVERY SINGER RECALLS THOSE SPECIAL moments when they heard their voice on the radio, but those experiences have been double-edged for Darlene Love.

First there were her early Phil Spector sessions. Love helped the producer build his Wall of Sound production formula, taking an uncredited lead on the Crystals' No. 1 single "He's a Rebel" while that girl group was on the road in 1962. "We did that all the time," Love says of her vocal group the Blossoms. "Nobody was aware of it, and most of the time the records weren't hits!" She did expect her name to grace "He's Sure the Boy I Love," only to hear that on the radio, billed once again to the Crystals.

Then there's "Christmas (Baby Please Come Home)," one of four classics under Love's name on 1963's A Christmas Gift for You from Phil Spector. Alas, her own tracks never charted like those Crystal hits. By the early '80s, despite a career that also included backing up Elvis Presley, Dionne Warwick and Tom Jones, Love was cleaning houses in Beverly Hills to make ends meet. That's when she heard her holiday trademark, piped through a home while she scrubbed a bathroom.

"That happened to be the right time and the right place, where the song came on the radio and it just gave me another spark in life," says Love, 76. "I thought, they're playing this on the radio. Somebody wants to hear me do it in public."

She focused on re-establishing her career—and finally reached new milestones. Love performed "Christmas (Baby Please Come Home)" on The Late Show with David Letterman for 28 holiday seasons until the comedian's 2015 retirement, was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 2011, and nabbed a top role in 20 Feet From Stardom, the Oscar-winning 2013 documentary about backup vocalists.

Now Love plays nearly 70 shows during the holiday season, including her return to the Cabot in Beverly on Nov. 25. "Holiday time is where I'm going to do my most work, so I take my vacation after my Christmas heyday," she says from her home north of Manhattan. "My husband's from Jamaica and still has family there, so every year we say we'll go somewhere else and then say 'nah!' "

Her holiday shows traditionally include not only Christmas standards but songs from other acts who she's worked with (such as Marvin Gaye or Luther Vandross) and a taste of 2015's Introducing Darlene Love, her first album of original pop in three decades. In addition to Ike and Tina Turner's "River Deep, Mountain High" and gospel number "Marvelous" (a nod to Love's roots in LA choirs and a chance to show off her own backup singers in concert), the album boasts songs written for her by Elvis Costello, Bruce Springsteen and producer Steven Van Zandt, whose opening "Among the Believers" turns Love's story into a widescreen anthem.

"Holiday time is where I'm going to do my most work, so I take my vacation after my Christmas heyday."

"He couldn't have written a better song for me," says Love, who sings "We are the rebels who carry your names"—a winking jab at that first Crystals smash—before its emphatic refrain, "I remain among the believers."

Van Zandt and his E Street Band boss Springsteen attended Love's first LA showcase after her housecleaning epiphany and urged her to move to New York. "I didn't have a career in California," Love says. "I was really working on faith." She began playing the Bottom Line (where Springsteen got his break), doing the tribute "Leader of the Pack" along with Late Night bandleader Paul Shaffer. When Letterman came to see it, he was wowed by "Christmas (Baby Please Come Home)," prompting his invitation. The Love affair only grew.

Of course, other Spector-produced hits that Love lays a claim to—"He's a Rebel," "Da Doo Ron Ron"—pop up in her live sets as well. Two decades ago, Love won a royalties lawsuit against Spector, who's serving a prison sentence for the 2003 murder of actress Lana Clarkson. "I didn't really hold grudges against Phil," Love says. "I started having a career because of those songs." ◆

STRANGE IDEAS

THE WAVE OF NOSTALGIA FOR THE '80S IS MORE LIKE PURE REVULSION

NETFLIX'S STRANGER THINGS 2 is the hot binge-watch of the moment. It's set in 1984 and full of spooky music and monsters. But for me, the scariest creature in Stranger Things isn't a slimy denizen of the alternate dimension. The biggest monster in Stranger Things is the 1980s itself.

We're accustomed to viewing the decade through the lens of kitschy nostalgia, all leg warmers and Devo, an era of cheesy innocence before the '90s. Well, Stranger Things might belong to the fantasy genre, but its depiction of the '80s is relentlessly realistic. And the '80s weren't cheesy. They were just gross.

I'm as guilty as anyone of romanticizing the past, but Stranger Things makes me wish I could've grown up now rather than in the secondhand-smoke and bully-filled dirty arcades of the '80s. Today we might have internet addiction and ISIS, but at least we don't have ugly wallpaper. As Stranger Things reminds me—with a persistence that is causing me post-traumatic stress disorder—ugly wallpaper was everywhere. And that's just a minor thread in the crap tapestry that was 1984.

Consider arcades. I'd say the show is actually generous on that front, since the arcade is depicted as a fun social place with games that have unreasonably good graphics. The reason you'd go to an arcade, though, wasn't because it was a great spot to meet your buddies. You went to an arcade because that was the only way you could play video games. So if you wanted to play Pole Position, you had to get your parents to drive you into town and drop you off at a dark room in the back of some other business. They may as well have been leaving you at an off-track betting parlor.

They'd then go grocery shopping or whatever while you tried to ration your quarters and maybe play a few games without getting in a fight with the menacing kids who always lurked around. What a great concept: I'm going to hand my kid a bunch of money and send him to a dark room in the back of a drugstore and hope he's still there/alive when I get back in an hour. In my local hangout, two kids named Rex and Frankie were ever-present, ready to abruptly yank the wheel on Pole Position if I didn't bribe them to go away.

When I finally convinced my parents to buy an Atari, it was the happiest day of my life. I could now play River Raid without worrying about larcenous coin slots and purple nurples. These days, the only reason arcades exist at all is because they've morphed into ticket-spitting casinos for children. The last time I took my kid to Dave & Busters, the pit boss comped him a steak dinner to keep him playing Big Bass Wheel.

Yeah, you say, but couldn't I have just gone to the arcade with my friends? No, I couldn't. Because in the '80s, nobody could find anybody. Say I called my friend Joe to go to the arcade. I picked up the big ugly rotary-dial wall phone, hoping I wasn't interrupting my neighbor (because we actually had to share a phone line) and I called Joe's house. His mom would answer and yell for him. But she wouldn't get him on the line because he was playing with power saws out in the garage or rode his bike to the Canadian border or had his leg caught in a bear trap in the woods. There was no way to know where anyone was until roughly 2002.

And even if she could find him and we agreed on a place and time, we still might have missed each other because—get this—nobody knew what time it was. You had a ballpark idea, sure, but unless you were actually driving past a bank, you had to trust whatever clock was nearby and all the clocks were different. The only people who actually knew the time were the telephone operators. So you could ask them, if you had access to a phone. Which you didn't. I mean, you could try a pay phone, but then you're down a quarter for the arcade.

The last time I took my kid to Dave & Busters, the pit boss comped him a steak dinner.

In the '80s, everybody was chain-smoking and eating Steak-umm. The cars were slow yet dangerous. Kids wore the same clothes all the time because a back-to-school outfit at the mall cost $900. There was no way to answer the simplest of questions—you just argued and didn't know. I once had a school principal bar me from going on the only class field trip of the year just because he didn't like me. I had to sit at school all day, alone. And he could get away with that, because how could I tell anyone? They wouldn't let me use the phone.

The only upshot of the '80s is that we didn't know how shoddy and mean things were at the time. And that should give hope to anyone who's filled with anguish over the present. Things tend to get better, in ways we can't imagine. Hopefully, my kids will look back on the twenty-teens and feel total revulsion at our gruesome existence. Stranger things have happened. ◆

SOUND ADVICE ON INVESTING AND HOLIDAY PARTIES

JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book is No One Ever Told Us That: Money and Life Lessons for Young Adults. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com.

I probably should have addressed this issue a long time ago, but it's weighing on me lately, and now I'm having trouble sleeping. I am a happily married woman and I love my husband. We live a good life—the issue is how good. My husband handles the finances, and I've been happy to let him. We don't have kids. We both work and make a decent living. The salaries aren't great—middle income—but the work is steady. For years, we've rented an apartment, never thinking about buying a house or condo since my husband feels it's not a good idea for us. We go out to great restaurants, enjoy fine wine and buy expensive toys. We travel and we entertain. We have fun and live a good life. But I'm starting to become anxious because we spend all our money. I mean all of it. The apartment is almost $3,000 a month, plus utilities. We save very little. Now I'm approaching 50 and starting to worry. What if one of us gets sick or loses a job? My husband doesn't seem too concerned about the future, and right now we have all we need. He doesn't know that I feel this way. I don't want him to think I don't trust his plan—or lack of a plan. Am I worrying for nothing? No. You're worrying about real things. Retirement plans, specifically 401(k)s, were invented so you can save financially for when—and if—you retire. They took the place of traditional pensions, which paid a set amount when you left your job. Pensions, except for certain professions (union jobs, mostly), have gone the way of the dinosaurs.

If you've both got jobs that you can go to forever, and you can guarantee that you'll always have good health, keep dancing and doing what you're doing. If not—and you're not waiting for a big inheritance from family—then start saving, and start doing it now. Contribute as much as you can to retirement plans. Max them out for growth with income.

Stay home and read. Listen to music. Give each other tough love.

I'm the manager of a sales organization. The office employs about 100 people, and this is the first time that I have to coordinate our holiday party. I'm a little nervous about things getting out of control, especially with everyone posting on social media. How do I make sure everyone has fun without encouraging behavior that can cost me my job? Your concerns are real. Let's assume that your party will have alcohol. Over the years, I've witnessed behavior that includes a visiting corporate officer at one of my firms biting the ear of our manager. The offender was fired the next day. Of course, romance flourished at many of these gatherings that were almost all held at restaurants that would dim the lights after the first drinks. I remember one party where a recent rookie to the office took out a pair of scissors and began to cut the ties of many of the men, including that of the biggest business producer in the firm. I never saw that rookie again. At least you won't have to fret about that problem. Now, almost no one wears ties to the office; and I wear bow ties. It's tough to cut mine in half without severing the carotid artery.

Nowadays, holiday parties reflect a good time, but not a great time. Keep your party simple: Include wine and beer, but no hard stuff. Don't worry as you can still get plenty of loose behavior on vino and suds. Make sure you move around constantly, touching base with everyone during the course of the evening. Make all your people feel good about themselves. Give them pats on the back and positive reinforcement. Mention some job they did that you can praise them for. People respond to honey much more than they do to vinegar. It's a great chance to build your own support base.

Make sure that after the first hour and a half, you bang on a glass with a spoon and offer a toast to your employees. Tell two stories that make them laugh. That's key and it makes them know you're one of them. Then thank them and say something to tug on their memories of when they were little. All of them will flash to their pasts. And then tell them, "We're a family, too. Happiest of holidays. I hope you look back on these days and drink a toast to us all." ◆ Contribute as much as you can to retirement plans. Max them out for growth with income.

GREAT NEWS

THE CHANNEL 7 ANCHOR REPORTS ON BLACK BELTS, SOUTHERN ACCENTS AND ON-AIR BLOOPERS

NEWS ANCHOR JADIANN THOMPSON, 33, IS A THREE-time Emmy-award winner and works for Channel 7 (WHDH-TV). Born and raised in Arkansas, she graduated from the University of Arkansas and spent a year teaching English in Madrid before launching her career in broadcast journalism. She was a multimedia journalist—writing, filming, reporting and editing her own stories—in Casper, Wyoming, before moving to Phoenix. From there, she became the anchor for the NBC affiliate in Kansas City and later landed Boston in 2015. She anchors four weekday newscasts, including the 9 pm show, which began when the station switched to an all-news format at the start of this year.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Let's start with your name. Where did it come from and how many people pronounce it correctly on the first try?
JADIANN THOMPSON: No one pronounces it correctly. One of the first things you'll learn about me is that I don't fit into any molds or stereotypes. I was raised on a small horse farm in Arkansas, and I was a no-name baby. I think it took until three weeks after I was born. I've been told that my mother found a translation of a Hebrew name she liked, "Jadiel," but that was masculine. My grandmother's name was Joanne, so she just sort of combined those two. She says it means "Living a graceful life."

How did you loose your Arkansas accent? Thank you for saying I don't have one. TV news kinda beat it out of me. I had a news director who forced me to take voice lessons. I was horrified at how much they cost. Anyway, I've worked hard on it, but it helps being out of Arkansas. When I come back from a visit home, I have to go through language detox.

What do you do with your downtime? I'm always on the Esplanade, biking or running. I'm on the Cape in the summer. I go to New Hampshire and ski in the winter. I just soak it all in.

Sports loyalties? Oh, I genuinely love all the Boston teams. It's a lot easier being from Arkansas, because we have no real pro teams, so it's not like I'm betraying any allegiances. I can still watch my Razorbacks. "Go, hog! Woo, pig!" And I can still be a Patriots fan.

Biggest story of your career? It's hard to single out just one; there's not one thing that made everything different. But the first that comes to mind was when I was new at my job in Phoenix. I'd gone from market 197 in Casper, Wyoming, to the country's number 12 market, which everyone had told me would never happen. Not long after, I was sent out to cover the state's largest wildfire. I was shooting, writing and editing my own stuff, and we were getting woken up at 2 am, being told to evacuate our hotel, while I'm trying to do all that. It was pretty intense.

Biggest nonstory of your career? In Casper, I worked my way up from beat reporter to main anchor, and I was working weekends, too, doing everything. If the weatherman didn't show up, I had to do it. But there was this one weekend when there was just nothing going on. And I'm the assignment desk. There was a beaded jewelry convention in town, and I went and did a story on that. I didn't actually cry, but I did think to myself, driving back in an all-out blizzard, "I hope it's going to be worth it someday."

Piece of news you'd most like to deliver? Well, I've gotten myself to where I am, and I know what it's like to be poor. I grew up with no money. I'm the first in my family to graduate from college. I watched my father work extremely hard. He still does. So it breaks my heart to see people who are hungry or homeless or both. I can barely handle it. So if I could say, "Everyone has shelter and food," that would be a perfect world.

Story from history you'd most like to have seen first-hand and reported on? I think I'm saying this because I've really embraced living in New England. I've walked the Freedom Trail. I'm one of the best tour guides in Boston. I've really rekindled my love for early American history, so I'm going to say the American Revolution. That's a moment in time like no other.

Most danger you've ever been in on assignment? Well, I've always told myself that at some point in my career, I should go to war zones and report on that. I think it's really important, and I appreciate the work our armed forces do so much. I've always weirdly wanted to be a part of it.

Biggest on-air faux pas? Oh, god! Everyone is going to Google it and now it will come up again at the top of searches for me, but I once had to say, "A billion dollar pitch," and I said, "A billion dollar bitch." It was awful. I was just so tongue-tied. My phone rang immediately during the commercial break, and it was my boss, mad.

"I did think to myself, driving back in an all-out blizzard, 'I hope it's going to be worth it someday.'"

Then someone graciously put it on YouTube, and it went like wildfire. So now when my dad tells someone back home that I'm on Channel 7, when they Google me, guess what pops up?

Thing people would be most surprised to learn about you? I think people are surprised to know that I have a black belt in karate. As a little girl, I wanted to do ballet and all sorts of stuff. My dad had done karate, and he convinced me to do it. I just went headfirst into it, and I got my black belt. I taught self-defense in college and situational awareness techniques. Then I ended up doing some boxing, and it really built my confidence. I've been on a lot of stories where it wasn't super safe and having that confidence is nice. I also had a really great relationship with my sensei, and I still do. He was like my Mister Miyagi, so it's a very cool part of my life.

What are your news sources? You've gotta go all over the map. Growing up, we talked about religion and politics at the table, and that's one of the reasons I got into this business. We talked about the hard subjects. I read George Orwell's 1984 at way too early an age. I've always questioned everything. I take nothing at face value. I always want to know the truth. So if I can, I go to primary sources. We're in a very polarized society right now, so you have to have sources that cover the spectrum. I watch the networks, CNN and Fox. I go to the AP. I read a ton: The New York Times, Wall Street Journal, Bloomberg. I sift through a lot. But if I can get my hands on the police report, I want to read that police report. I'm an anchor, but I think a good anchor is a good reporter first and foremost.

Are you a morning person? No! I am such a night owl! I have so much respect for anyone who does early-morning news. But I'm at my best at 9 o'clock at night. ◆

RESTAURATEURS PAIR FESTIVE SCENES WITH HOLIDAY RECIPES

By Scott Kearnan
Photos by Holly Rike

Nancy Batista-Caswell

Owner of Oak + Rowan, Ceia Kitchen + Bar and BRINE

Ceia, one of Nancy Batista-Caswell's long-running, well-received Newburyport restaurants, was named after the Portuguese word for "feast." But even as she branched out with Oak + Rowan, her Boston debut celebrating its one-year anniversary in Fort Point this month, the restaurateur never forgot that feast and family are the intertwined roots of her passion. She chooses to close her restaurants on Thanksgiving and Christmas, giving staff time to spend with loved ones — or volunteer with the Greater Boston Food Bank, one of her favorite local nonprofits. Here, Batista-Caswell taps chef Justin Shoults to put an Oak + Rowan twist on a traditional side dish.

This Tiffany crystal candleholder was a wedding gift from her sister-in-law, who sadly died a few months later. To Batista-Caswell, when it's aglow on the table, it represents the permanent presence of all loved ones who have been lost: Seats forever saved.

Tablescapes are an art form to Batista-Caswell, and ivy garlands are a favorite flourish come holiday time. Not only do the greens have a seasonal sensibility, but she also likes that garlands, unlike stemmed floral pieces, are malleable and able to stylishly wind around other table elements.

The restaurateur likes adding fresh produce to tables (here, seasonal selections such as cranberry and cauliflower romanesco) as a nod to treating regional farmers as extended family. Oak + Rowan gets much of its heirloom-variety fruits and vegetables from Forts Ferry Farm, an organic farm owned by chef Shoults' friends and former culinary schoolmates.

Fall Squash Salad

1 acorn squash
1 butternut squash
¼ cup vegetable oil
1 tablespoon cider vinegar
1 delicata squash
1 cup homemade lime and maple vinaigrette
1 head radicchio, cut into 2-inch-by-½-inch strips
2 cups homemade cranberry puree
1 cup homemade sage granola
Salt to taste

- Carefully cut the acorn squash into four pieces. Scoop out and discard the seeds and pulp. Using a Japanese mandolin, slice the quartered acorn squash into very thin ribbons.

- Peel the butternut squash. Cut off the bottom, then cut that in half to scoop out the seeds and pulp. Dice the bottom part into medium-sized pieces and reserve for puree. Use a large melon baller to scoop out squash balls from the squash neck. Blanch the squash balls in boiling salted water for 1 minute, or until slightly tender. Allow the balls to cool to room temperature. Cut the scraps from the balled-out squash into medium-sized pieces to also use for the puree.

- In a saucepot, heat two tablespoons of vegetable oil. Add the diced butternut squash pieces and a pinch of salt. Cook the squash down until it becomes soft and aromatic. Add enough water to just cover the cooked down squash. Add a pinch of salt and bring to a boil; reduce heat to a simmer and cook for 5 minutes. Strain off the liquid and reserve. Put the cooked squash into a blender, add some of the reserved liquid and blend on high until smooth. Adjust the consistency with the reserved liquid if the puree is too thick. Season the puree with the cider vinegar and salt. Taste and adjust the seasoning if necessary. Chill the puree completely and place it into a squeeze bottle.

- Cut the delicata squash into ½-inch rings. Using a spoon, clean out the inside of the rings. Heat up a large saute pan. Add a thin layer of vegetable oil and allow the pan to get hot. Add the rings of delicata squash and cook until they get a nice caramelized color and become tender. Season with a little salt, remove from the pan and allow to cool at room temperature.

- To assemble the four salads, make sure all the ingredients are at room temperature. Toss the shaved acorn squash with the homemade lime maple vinaigrette and a pinch of salt. Once the squash begins to break down slightly, add in the radicchio and toss until it is well coated.

- Place a couple spoonfuls of cranberry puree in a circle on a plate. Put two rings of cooked delicata squash in the center of the circle. Take a handful of the tossed acorn squash and radicchio and put it in a line across the plate. Squeeze out a couple of large dots of the butternut squash puree. Nestle three or four butternut squash balls into the acorn squash ribbons. Sprinkle each of the four salads with a couple of tablespoons of sage granola. Serve immediately.

Sticky Rice-Stuffed Cornish Hens

2 Cornish hens, deboned
3 cups sticky rice
3 cups water
4 tablespoons vegetable oil
2 tablespoons dried shrimp, rehydrated and diced
½ cup Taiwanese sausage
¼ cup shallots, caramelized
10 pieces dried shiitake, rehydrated and sliced thin
2 cups shiitake dashi
1 cup chicken stock
¼ cup sesame oil
¼ cup Wanjashan soy sauce
¾ cup peas, frozen
¾ cup carrots, frozen
1 teaspoon sea salt
½ teaspoon black pepper

Marinade
2 tablespoons Shaoxing wine
2 tablespoons Wanjashan soy sauce
2 teaspoons sesame oil

- Preheat convection oven to 400 degrees.

- In a medium bowl, soak sticky rice in water for 30 minutes. (The rice will absorb the water, so there's no need to strain later.) In a small pan, saute rehydrated, diced shrimp in 1 tablespoon of vegetable oil and set aside. In a small pan, saute Taiwanese sausage in 2 tablespoons of vegetable oil until golden and set aside. In a small pan, caramelize shallots in 1 tablespoon of vegetable oil and set aside.

- In a small pot, simmer the dried shiitake in water for 30–45 minutes. Strain and reserve the dashi. Squeeze out the shiitake and slice. Set both aside separately.

- In a rice cooker, add the sticky rice, shiitake dashi, chicken stock, shrimp, sausage and shallots. Mix well. Cook the rice, then add sesame oil, soy sauce, peas, carrots, shiitake, salt and pepper, mixing well so the color is uniformly brown. Taste and season again if necessary. Set aside to cool before stuffing deboned hen.

- In a small bowl, mix the marinade ingredients. Marinate the deboned Cornish hens for 20 minutes. Remove the hens from the marinade before stuffing with sticky rice. Roast for 20 minutes until golden and the internal temperature is 165 degrees.

Tracy Chang

Chef/owner of PAGU

When she was a child and learning history in elementary school, Tracy Chang says she and her cousin "invented Thanksgiving" in their family, using prodigious culinary skills to combine traditional Japanese stieky rice with the American custom of a stuffed bird. Today, the alum of kitchens from Boston's O Ya to Basque Country's Michelin-starred Martin Berasategui is thankful for a strong first year of her debut restaurant PAGU. It's quiekly beeome a Cambridge community hub, espeeially with the reeent addition of morning breakfast feasts. A variation of Chang's first tasty Thanksgiving dish is now served here during the holiday season.

At holiday dinners, Chang loves to sip on Basque cider and a bottle from Waltham's Dovetail Sake, Massachusetts' only sake brewery. PAGU even uses Dovetail's kasu, a byproduct of sake production, as an ingredient for eats such as blueberry muffins and squid ink lobster rolls. Waste not, want not.

Scattered on the table are Japanese black maple leaves, nods to a tree from the yard of Chang's childhood home in Lexington. In poignant, full-circle form, Chang's current home and restaurant is steps from the MIT campus where her parents first met.

We get by with a little help from our friends, so Chang keeps close reminders of talented, supportive pals. The ceramic dishware is by buddy Jordan Colón, a Berkshires-based chef-turned-potter. Crocheted pugs, references to Chang's pooch Phoebe, are gifts from friends, and many of PAGU's black walnut tables were fashioned by another.

Demetri Tsolakis

Co-owner of Committee and Gre.co

The jovial warmth of Greek family gatherings is what Demetri Tsolakis strives to recreate at his Boston restaurants Committee, a chic dining and drinking hotspot in the Seaport, and Gre.co, a pita-filled fast-casual spot that opened in Back Bay in February with fast-tracked plans to expand: Expect several more Boston and out-of-state locations soon. That success is one more reason to celebrate at his mother's home, where Tsolakis and a big, boisterous crew, including restaurant staff without local families of their own, gather around the table on holidays for first, second — and sixth — helpings of classic Hellenic cuisine.

Tsolakis' mother immigrated to Massachusetts at 14-years-old, but still swaths her holiday table with a reminder of her original home. This handmade table linen was stitched by nuns in a monastery in Aigio, Greece, where she grew up. Recipes from the coastal town inspire menus at Tsolakis' restaurants.

Tsolakis visits Aigio twice a year to find fresh culinary inspiration and stock up on native foods, from olive oil used at Gre.co and Committee to bottles of Moschofilero, a Greek white wine produced from grapes stomped at his great-grandparents' vineyard.

While turkey is often served at Greek Christmas, Tsolakis says his family – weary of turkey after having the bird on Thanksgiving-- instead opts for lamb, which is also a popular choice on saint-related feast days. This recipe was prepared for the feast of St. Demetrios. Tsolakis' namesake, as it's Hellenic tradition to entertain on your saint day.

Roasted Leg of Lamb with Potatoes

4-8 pound leg of lamb
1 clove garlic, thinly sliced
8 ounces Kasseri cheese, thinly sliced
6 lemons
6 potatoes
Greek olive oil
Oregano
Salt
Pepper

- Preheat the oven to 350 degrees.

- Clean the leg of lamb with cold water and remove any excess skin, then wash with the juice of four lemons and season with 3 tablespoons of salt and 1 tablespoon of pepper. Place the leg of lamb in a large roasting pan. Make slits into the lamb and then insert thinly sliced garlic and Kasseri cheese into the slits. Pour Greek olive oil and lemon juice over the lamb generously.

- Wash and scrub the potatoes with cold water and cut into quarters. Put quartered potatoes into the roasting pan with the lamb. Season the potatoes to taste with salt, pepper and oregano. Pour lemon juice and a small amount of olive oil over the potatoes. Cover the pan with aluminum foil and cook for 2 hours. Remove the pan from the oven and pour the juice from the lamb onto the potatoes. Return the pan to the oven and cook for 2 more hours.

Rustic Country Bread

3 cups water, room temperature
3 1/3 cups white flour
3/4 cup wheat flour
3/4 cup leaven
2 tablespoons sea salt

- Mix water, flours, leaven and sea salt together in a glass or ceramic bowl until all ingredients are well incorporated. Cover with a cloth and let rise until doubled in size.

- Run hands around the edges and pour dough on to a floured surface. Cut in two, cover with a cloth, and let sit for an hour.

- Preheat the oven to 400 degrees.

- Once the loaves have rested and risen a second time, put one loaf directly on an oven stone. Bake for 20 minutes and then turn the loaf over and cook for 10 minutes. Tap the bottom of the loaf (There should be a hollow sound and the crust should be hard) If the crust is still a little soft, bake for 5 more minutes or until hard Repeat for the second loaf

Esti Parsons

Co-owner of the Maiden

As a restaurateur, Esti Parsons represents an important branch of Boston's hospitality family tree. She owns sleek South Boston spot the Maiden with husband Drew, bassist for the band American Hi-Fi, and brother-in-law John. But her roots also run deep with decades-spanning pal and former business partner Christopher Myers: He was the "man of honor" at their wedding, and she's now general manager at Myers+Chang, his lauded eatery with wife Joanne Chang. Parsons enjoys putting together a tablescape that integrates elements from given and chosen family. "It's like creating strange little worlds," she says, adding a rustic loaf of bread is a staple no matter the occasion.

Every year, the Parsons invite Myers and Chang to spend Thanksgiving together at Esti's mother's house. Her mom is an avid collector of antique curios and over the years has been gifting Parsons with these vintage deer figurines. "Some are creepy and some are quirky," Parsons laughs. All are adorable reminders of mom's love.

The established hospitality vet has industry connections akin to extended family—so naturally, she's let in on their family secrets too. Exhibit A: Lydia Shire's cranberry sauce, a favorite side dish. The doyenne of Boston dining once shared her father's cinnamon and clove-bedecked hush-hush recipe as a special holiday treat.

These fresh flowers, including roses, dark purple Landini lilies and eucalyptus, represent Parsons' love of gardening—a relaxing, meditative hobby for someone always on the go. "In my next life I'll be a farmer," Parsons says, adding she caught the hospitality bug from her parents, enthusiastic entertainers who cooked using home garden-plucked ingredients.

LADY BIRD ★★★★

If you liked last year's highly praised The Edge of Seventeen, a delicate comedic drama about high school life for an awkward teen girl, you'll love the similarly themed, yet even more perceptive coming-of-age tale, Lady Bird. The stunning, semi-autobiographical writing/directing debut of Greta Gerwig—a wonderfully idiosyncratic actress who penned the strong screenplays for 2012's Frances Ha and 2015's Mistress America, a pair of films she also starred in for her partner of six years, director Noah Baumbach—is easily one of the year's best films. One of the better directorial decisions she made was to retain those movies' cinematographer, Sam Levy, but her best decision of all: Hiring two-time Oscar nominee Saoirse Ronan (the 23-year-old star of Brooklyn) to portray Christine "Lady Bird" McPherson. Like Gerwig, Lady Bird was 17 in 2002, and living in Sacramento, "the Midwest of California," while not-so-secretly dreaming of moving to New York. Christine's also fond of claiming she lives on "the wrong side of the tracks," which sets up one of the film's many big laughs, including when her first boyfriend (Lucas Hedges, an Oscar nominee for last year's Manchester by the Sea) meets her mother (Laurie Metcalf from TV's Roseanne, in her best role in years) and observes that "I always thought that was, like, a metaphor, but there are actual train tracks." Bittersweet and truthful, this is one to see with your mom at Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square. / Brett Michel

BLADE RUNNER 2049 ★1/2 If I never see Blade Runner 2049 again, it'll be too soon. It feels strange saying this about the long-awaited sequel to 1982's Blade Runner, a movie I've seen dozens of times. Director Ridley Scott's hugely influential "future noir" was neither a critical nor commercial success when it was released. But in the 35 years since, most observers now agree that Blade Runner and its rain-soaked dystopia is a masterpiece—something I'll never accuse its sequel of, despite the warm critical reception that it has received. Time has been kind to Scott's expressionistic triumph of production design, pioneering electronic music, shadow-laden cinematography and a plot about the very human urge to fit in, but the overlong follow-up from Denis Villeneuve (director of last year's equally overpraised sci-fi film Arrival) is very much a product of 2017, despite its 2049 setting. The small-scaled intimacy of the '82 picture has been replaced by nearly everything that's wrong with contemporary filmmaking: Who needs ambiguity when Hollywood studios are in the franchise business? Laying the groundwork for more theoretical sequels, this 164-minute film suffers from a weak protagonist, K (Ryan Gosling)—a cop tasked with hunting down and "retiring" (i.e.: killing) rogue replicants, the job Rick Deckard (Harrison Ford) held in the original. Ford's been unfairly criticized for delivering wooden performances, but the warmth he brings when he shows up for this film's final hour simply shames Gosling. When it comes to the future, I'm happy to stick with the past. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Killing of a Sacred Deer ★★★ There are a few things you should know before setting foot in a Yorgos Lanthimos film. The Greek director's movies, like 2009's Dogtooth and 2015's The Lobster (both Oscar nominees), are maddeningly obtuse and deadpan to a fault. Off-kilter and prone to sudden bursts of violence, his pictures will either pull you into their subversive, darkly comic vibes or send you running for the exit. So it's only fitting that his latest provocation, which he's co-scripted with frequent collaborator and playwright Efthymis Filippou, opens on an extreme close-up of an open-heart surgery (and yes, that's a real organ pumping away as it's being cut into on screen) being performed by eminent cardiologist and recovering alcoholic Steven Murphy (Colin Farrell of The Lobster). Take it as a warning that this film, which borrows its title from the ending of Euripides' Iphigenia in Aulis, is not for the squeamish. The plot involves an impossible choice that must be made by Steven involving his seemingly perfect nuclear family, including wife Anna (Nicole Kidman, Farrell's co-star in Sofia Coppola's recent remake of The Beguiled), their 12-year-old son, Bob (Sunny Suljic), and 14-year-old daughter, Kim (Raffey Cassidy, Young Snow White in 2012's Snow White and the Huntsman). If you happen to be up on your Euripides, you may have some inkling of the Greek tragedy that's about to unfold, set in motion by Martin (Dunkirk's Barry Keoghan), the polite 16-year-old who one suspects is a fan of Cape Fear. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

Last Flag Flying ★★1/2 Something odd happened as Darryl Ponicson and director Richard Linklater adapted the former's 2004 novel, Last Flag Flying, to the screen. What Ponicson originally penned as a sequel to his 1970 novel, The Last Detail, has been transformed into something a bit... different. Hal Ashby memorably turned that original book into a 1973 film starring Jack Nicholson as Bad-Ass Buddusky and Otis Young as Mule Mulhall, two career Navy men tasked with delivering 18-year-old Larry Meadows (Randy Quaid) from Norfolk, Virginia, to Portsmouth, New Hampshire, where he's to serve eight years in the brig. Linklater's ostensible continuation, however, focuses on a slightly different trio of men. While still set in 2003, 30 years after the events of Ashby's movie, Bad-Ass has become Sal Nealon (Bryan Cranston), while Mulhall is now Richard Mueller (Laurence Fishburne)—and they're Marines, not sailors. Meanwhile, Meadows has become Larry "Doc" Shepherd (Steve Carell), a quiet former Navy medic who tracks down the men who escorted him to jail three decades prior, to seek their help in burying his son, a young Marine killed in the Iraq War. The trip they take in Linklater's film parallels the one in Ashby's, but the original trio's personalities have been reduced to rote stereotypes. No matter how hard Cranston, Fishburne and Carell try, they can't surpass the fact that they've been cast as the Drunk, the Reverend and the Introvert. The movie has moments of real power, but there's no getting around the fact that we're better left with fond memories of The Last Detail. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

LBJ ★★★ At a recent screening of this political drama from director Rob Reiner, Lyndon Baines Johnson biographer Doris Kearns Goodwin let it be known that Woody Harrelson completely nails the Texan she knew personally. I'll take it on faith that she's right, though the actor's uncanny makeup job (courtesy of Ve Neill from SyFy's Face Off) does a good deal of getting him there. Sure, Harrelson still may not be the physical match for LBJ that Bryan Cranston was in Jay Roach's All the Way, last year's HBO movie version of the Broadway play, but the actor's natural charm comes through even as he downplays his comic instincts. The film dramatizes the period between when Johnson loses the 1960 Democratic presidential nomination to U.S. Sen. John Fitzgerald Kennedy (Jeffrey Donovan of USA's Burn Notice) till just after LBJ takes the oath of office to succeed the slain president. Richard Jenkins (Oscar-nominated lead of The Visitor) lends great support as Johnson's Southern mentor, U.S. Sen. Richard Russell, who butts heads with his old friend when JFK's unexpected successor decides to champion the Civil Rights Act. Although LBJ is often remembered for expanding the war in Vietnam, Reiner's film does a fair job of humanizing the man who had an impossible act to follow. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Murder on the Orient Express ★★ Kenneth Branagh's stab at a big screen update of Agatha Christie's seminal detective novel, 1934's Murder on the Orient Express, is being sold on the strength of its impressive cast. Branagh steps into the shoes of famed Belgian detective Hercule Poirot, while the suspects are played by international cinema's best and brightest, young and old. From Judi Dench to Daisy Ridley, Johnny Depp to Derek Jacobi, Michelle Pfeiffer to Penélope Cruz, and on to Willem Dafoe and Josh Gad, the actors alone are worth the price of admission—even if most of them are woefully outmatched by the superstars who appeared in Sidney Lumet's exceptional adaptation from 1974. If you're unfamiliar, Albert Finney's Poirot investigated scores of the silver screen's royalty, including Ingrid Bergman, Sean Connery, Lauren Bacall, John Gielgud, Martin Balsam, Anthony Perkins and Vanessa Redgrave. Nevertheless, Branagh and his frequent collaborator, cinematographer Haris Zambarloukos, have exquisitely captured a handsome production, shot on 70mm film (though you'll be hard-pressed to view it in this format outside of New York and LA), that's almost as pretty as it is dramatically empty. Most of the cast are wasted once the train leaves the station, while the screenplay by Michael Green (Blade Runner 2049) leaves much to be desired as it listlessly teletypes whodunit, while rushing through the motive of why. Save a few bucks and watch Lumet's superior version instead. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Only the Brave ★★★1/2 Don't let the poor marketing campaign dissuade you from seeing director Joseph Kosinski's terrific, true-life tale, an emotionally charged drama detailing the heroic story of the Granite Mountain Hotshots. Based on Sean Flynn's GQ article about the local firefighters who bucked the odds to become one of the most elite teams of wildfire combatants in the nation, this timely tale is anchored by a stoic performance from Josh Brolin (last year's Hail, Caesar!), who's quietly grown into being one of the best, most underappreciated leading men in the business. He plays Eric Marsh, the "Supe" of the Granite Mountain crew, a man who talks to the flames he's dedicated his life to extinguishing—even as they pose a very real risk of extinguishing the lives of him and his 19 crew members. The script by Ken Nolan and Eric Warren Singer is a slow burn, gradually revealing details that make us care about these men as we see their lives and struggles outside of work. Jennifer Connelly (an Oscar winner for her role in 2001's A Beautiful Mind) matches Brolin blow-for-blow as Marsh's long-suffering but loving wife Amanda, a strong-willed woman who bristles at coming in a distant second to her husband's addiction to his job. Miles Teller (Whiplash), Taylor Kitsch (TV's Friday Night Lights) and James Badge Dale (13 Hours) bring a lot of personality to the Hotshots, while Jeff Bridges (star of Kosinski's 2010 misfire, TRON: Legacy) supplies his now-patented old coot routine, offering just the right amount of porch-based wisdom in this surprisingly affecting film. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Suburbicon ★1/2 Think of Joel and Ethan Coen's previously unproduced script for Suburbicon as their decades-old dry run for Fargo, filled with half-formed ideas such as protagonist Gardner Lodge (a miscast Matt Damon), a proto-version of William H. Macy's Jerry Lundergaard. It seems futile that anyone would have wanted to dust off this early draft of a subpar, '50s-era Coen caper and spruce it up for production, especially by forcing a straight-faced race drama on its fringes, but that's exactly what George Clooney and his co-writing/co-producing partner Grant Heslov have done. They likely thought they were being clever by focusing on Damon's adulterer, who hires a couple of idiots to kill his wheelchair-bound wife (Julianne Moore) so that he can have relations with her able-bodied twin sister (Moore again), all while he condemns the perfectly nice black family who moved in next door. Ho-ho! Despite how great it looks (it's been expertly lensed by Robert Elswit, who shot Clooney's vastly superior directing effort, Good Night, and Good Luck) or sounds (composer Alexandre Desplat more or less approximates the musical style Carter Burwell employs in countless collaborations with the Coens), this film is a tonal mess. And there's no getting around the fact that while the Coens can do retro lunacy in their sleep (see: Hail, Caesar!), Clooney is in way over his head. A dazzlingly hilarious turn by Oscar Isaac as a seedy insurance investigator only accentuates how little else works. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Three Billboards Outside Ebbing, Missouri ★★★1/2 Let's get right to it: Those three billboards, spread out one after another on a stretch of back road, display a simple succession of messages. The first, "RAPED WHILE DYING," is followed by "AND STILL NO ARRESTS?" Then finally, "HOW COME, CHIEF WILLOUGHBY?" Since a highway was built, few people will drive past them, but Mildred Hayes (Frances McDormand, Oscar-winning actress from Fargo) has made her point, succinctly. She's purchased the outdoor ad space after her teenaged daughter's corpse was found. It's been 7 months without any answers, so the hardened woman, scarred from grief, has gone public with her grievance against the local police and their captain (Woody Harrelson, in a well-measured turn). McDormand and her character are a force to be reckoned with, which she ably demonstrates when she dresses down a condescending priest, using words that would make Jesus himself blush. It's no surprise then that the film is the brainchild of British writer/director Martin McDonagh, the talented playwright who made one hell of a feature film debut with 2008's In Bruges. His follow-up, Seven Psychopaths, wasn't nearly as accomplished, but his latest is a return to form. As you might suspect, the film doesn't quite go where you expect, which is half the fun—when there's fun to be had. A somber, sobering affair, you won't soon forget the explosive exchanges, nor the odd characters played by pros like Sam Rockwell and Peter Dinklage. (At Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Wonderstruck ★★★1/2 With an adult-minded oeuvre, it's a bit unexpected for Todd Haynes to direct an adaptation of Wonderstruck, Brian Selznick's young adult novel. The celebrated writer/illustrator's earlier book, The Invention of Hugo Cabret, was just as unexpectedly brought to the screen in Martin Scorsese's spellbinding Hugo. Both adaptations center on lonely children and feature nostalgic looks at how early cinema can feed an untapped desire to create. Thankfully for fans of Scorsese and Haynes, both films could only have sprung forth from the talents of their respective auteurs. Hugo was as much a valentine to Paris as it was to movies, and now Haynes' Wonderstruck stands as both a love letter to New York and silent films. Screenwriter Selznick (adapting his own book) grants Haynes creative license to utilize the wildly different cinematic styles of two separate eras—1927 and 1977—to tell their decades-spanning tale. For the silent era, this means emulating the work of pioneers like D.W. Griffith and F.W. Murnau, who invented much of the visual language that cinema still employs today, while the seedy Manhattan of the '70s recalls the pioneering work of street-level masters like Scorsese and William Friedkin. Aided by the immensely talented young leads he found to play the 12-year-old protagonists—Millicent Simmonds (a hearing-impaired actress making her screen debut) for '27 and Oakes Fegley (star of last year's Pete's Dragon) for '77—Haynes has made a film you can feel good about seeing with your children. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

MAKING WAVES Growing up in an artistic family, singer Domino Kirke has never shied away from her passion for performing. From her early years playing piano for her drummer father—Simon Kirke of Free and Bad Company—to touring her first solo album, Beyond Waves, Kirke keeps family ties at the forefront of her deeply personal lyrics. Her new songs "Friend of the Family," "Black Jack" and "Half Blood," are self-proclaimed "love letters" to her loved ones. "I actually find it easier to connect to people when I'm singing these songs," Kirke says. "More than any other songs that I've ever written or any show I've ever played." The Brooklyn-based indie songstress drops by Great Scott on Nov. 18—but head to improper.com for a Q-and-A with her ahead of the show. / Julia Aparicio

CUTTING EDGE Straddling the line between digital and tactile, German printmaker Christiane Baumgartner first uses her camera to take photos or videos and then transforms the stills by hand-carving them into wood. Rather than choosing between modern technology and traditional art forms, Baumgartner seamlessly blends the two, down to the horizontal lines that mimic her often found grainy source images. With woodcuts depicting roadways and military cargo planes, her work focuses on themes of motion and speed—though her process is anything but quick: Transall, the Museum of Fine Art's most reeent (and massive) acquisition, took Baumgartner 10 months to complete and measures 14 feet long. Go see what other four pieees made the cut through May 28. / Brenna Donovan PHOTO: MUSEUM OF FINE ARTS, BOSTON

TALE AS OLD AS TIME

The invitation read "Till the last petal falls," but so epic was the Storybook Ball to benefit Mass General Hospital for Children, it could've just as easily said, "Till the last fella crawls."

One of the most ballyhooed blowouts on Boston's social calendar, the black-tie, Beauty and the Beast-themed gala, held at the Castle at Park Plaza, exceeded any and all expectations. To begin with, the room was transformed into a Disney-worthy extravaganza of candlelight and flowers, while the crowd included a Who's Who of philanthropic Boston, to wit: Fashion avatar Patty Ribakoff and the adoring Charles, the swanlike Alli Achtmeyer and her dapper other half, Bill, blond cutie Ellie Chu and her handsome husband, Brian, brunette stunner Annette Goubeaux, the suspiciously tanned Alyson and Jeff Lindsey, telegenic chef Ming Tsai and his better half, Polly, Beacon Hill beauty Katherine O'Keeffe with debonair main man, Ian, latter-day Lily Pulitzer Remy Stressenger, and so on and so forth.

Guests could play carnival games for designer prizes, while the tables stretching the length of the room added to the drama, as did one woman who said, "Wait! I lost my earring!" only to find it in her decolletage a minute later.

Dinner was superb, and by the time dessert arrived, enough wine had been poured that a singing teapot or a dancing candelabra would have seemed perfectly plausible, if not likely. Also true to the evening's theme: There was a bit of beastly behavior in the photo booth, but overall, it was an eye-popping evening that raised major moolah.

Overheard in line for the bar: "Is that club soda you're drinking?"

TAKIN' ONE FOR THE TEAM

Q: How many big shots does it take to fill up the ballroom of the Westin Copley Place?

A: Ask the folks at Mass Eye and Ear, who assembled a super high-octane crowd for the eighth annual Sense-ation! Gala.

Present and accounted for: Honorary chairs Joey McIntyre (sporting a seizure-inducing sequined jacket) and his spectacular wife, Barrett, with enough of his extended family to field a football team, NBA nabob Wyc Grousbeck and his raven-haired wife, Emilia Fazzalari, and kids, Kelsey and Campbell, car czar Herb Chambers, first lady Lauren Baker and the improbably tall Charlie, silver-haired emcee Billy Costa, red-headed siren Deb Goldberg and her investment guru husband, Michael Winter, the super stylish mother-daughter duo of Berneda Meeks and Laura Saltonstall, bosom buddies Pat Kreger and Helyn Oatis, fashionista-to-the-stars Elisha Daniels, the stunning Kelley Doyle, eye surgeon extraordinaire Jo-Ann Haney Tilton, the unfairly attractive Jacqueline and Nate Jowett, and one person who said, "The lighting in here makes me feel like I'm at SoulCycle."

Dinner and a live auction were followed by a special musical performance from Clay Cook of the Zac Brown Band, who is a patient at the hospital and played a song he co-wrote with John Mayer when they were college roommates at Berklee.

The evening's best exchange: Someone said to Grousbeck, "The Celtics season opener is tonight!" To which the owner replied, "It is. Which is why you may see me making strange faces at my phone."

THE JOYS OF PARENTHOOD

You know you're at the right party when an enormous suburban parking lot has no spaces left. Faith in Fashion, a fundraiser for the post-traumatic stress disorder program at Roxbury Presbyterian Church, attracted an SRO crowd to the American Legion hall in Newton.

The brainchild of the Rev. Liz Walker and fashion designer David Josef, the evening began with cocktails and a delicious buffet and continued with a live auction and fashion show featuring the work of Josef, BlancoMaj, Iam Kreyol, Denise Hajjar and Marie Galvin.

Front and center: The stunning Robyn Glover, there to watch her mother, Lynette Glover-Griffin, strut the runway, the latter's husband, Skip, Wellesley hipsters Lynne and Gary Smith, bespoke tailor Alan Rouleau, the dazzlingly gorgeous Karen Holmes Ward, fashion plate Jacqui Budd, supermodel Hollis Colby, restaurateur Sonia Garufi, Broadway babe Mary Callanan, recent Harvard grad Norma Heath, the legendary Yolanda Cellucci, proud mom Shondell Davis, avuncular priest the Rev. Alex Oneto, the uber-stylish Becky Vercollone (wearing a gorgeous dress she bought in Australia, designed by an aboriginal woman), her talented other half, Bob, and one woman who found out that it was a cash bar and joked, "Thank goodness I did well stripping last night."

However, the evening's best comment came from the woman who said, "Once you become a mom, your handbag goes from a place to store your makeup to a receptacle for Cheerios, diaper wipes and SpongeBob crap." ◆

SHOP TO IT

I FINISHED MY CHRISTMAS SHOPPING already—or most of it at least. It wasn't always like this: I remember rushing to the Providence Place Mall on Dec. 23 when I was home from college to get all my family's gifts in a few hours. I parked in the garage and I never even had to put on a coat. Nowadays, however, the length of my shopping list has grown exponentially, meaning that gifts for a gaggle of nephews are purchased online—as are many other items. But since I like to save the best for last, the only shopping I have left is the fun stuff. The kind I can access without getting in the car and circling around a parking lot looking for a spot for 30 minutes. It's the more meaningful items from little boutiques and museum gift shops throughout the city—the same ones you can find in our gift guide. The estimable Sarah Hagman has reworked the lyrics from "The Twelve Days of Christmas" into a gift guide, with products ranging from a pair of honeybee earrings to an olive-oil decanter from a local potter. With 76 gifts in total from nearly 40 spots, it's bound to spark a few ideas for your own shopping lists.

Elsewhere in the magazine, I size up a pair of mall renovations, Marissa Angelone has some ideas so you don't get cold feet this winter, and Nathan Tavares takes a snapshot of a new Polaroid camera. And don't miss Jonathan Soroff's interview with our cover subject, Nastia Liukin. The U.S. gymnast, who won the individual all-around gold medal in the 2008 Olympics, reveals why she's happy to make Boston her long-term home. Happy shopping!

WHAT'S BUBBLING UP ON THE LOCAL DRINKING SCENE

Some Things Brewing

Drink in these new options for beer, bubbles and cocktails in town. / Sarah Hagman

Samuel Adams unveiled its Boston Brewery Tap Room in November, allowing some 80 drinkers to check out at least a dozen taps featuring seasonal favorites, experimental brews from the nano brewery—like the currently flowing Double IPA test run—and beers about to hit shelves, including the New England IPA that features pineapple and grapefruit hops and which visitors can take home in 22-ounce canned "crowlers" ahead of next year's national release. Plus, get a taste of limited barrel-aged beers from the newly debuted Bier Keller space that's taken over the pre-Prohibition Haffenreffer Brewery's aging cellar. It's now stocked with beers maturing in wine, Buffalo Trace bourbon and Utopia barrels, and visitors can regularly tour the cellar on Mondays and Fridays at 3:30 pm; through December, sample barrel-aged Vixen, Double Bock and Black Harbor Stout paired with Bon Pere cheese.

30 GERMANIA ST., BOSTON (617-368-5080) SAMUELADAMS.COM

Opened in November, the Cocktail Lab at Earls hosts 40 seats for guests to try out an exclusive menu separate from the upper level of the Prudential eatery, including six classic Boston-centric cocktails—think Backbar cocktail slinger Sam Treadway's Agony & Ecstasy, a mix of mezcal, St-Germain, grapefruit, ginger and a customizable amount of chipotle Tabasco to drinkers' liking. That's in addition to originals from a roster of guest bartenders who pop in Mondays through Thursdays from 5 to 11 pm to get their hands on fancy equipment like a refrigerated circulator, which hits extreme enough temperatures to freeze alcohol. In December, the space adds Monday night cocktail classes to the calendar, as well as ticketed tasting parties on third Thursdays; Dec. 21 features Earls manager Melinda Maddox, Deep Ellum's Sabrina Kershaw and Highball Lounge's Clairessa Chaput.

THE SHOPS AT PRUDENTIAL CENTER, 800 BOYLSTON ST., BOSTON (857-957-0949) EARLS.CA

Up and running through January, the Champagne Lounge at OAK Long Bar + Kitchen transforms the Red Room into a pop-up on Thursdays, Fridays and Saturdays beginning at 5 pm. Up to 14 guests can cozy up alongside the fireplace, glassed-wall wine vault and stained glass windows to sample a curated beverage list. By the half- and full-glass, there's 2006 Dom Perignon to be had, plus by-the-bottle options, such as Lieb Cellars' Blanc de Blanc "Reserve" from Long Island, New York, a favorite of assistant general manager Daniel Loperfido. The bar's also uncorking select wines normally reserved for bottle service, including glass pours of the violet- and pepper-flecked 2013 Cheval des Andes—in December, they'll decant one of the vineyard's beloved vintages. Those who like the hard stuff can sample nearly 50 premium whiskeys, like Yamazaki Sherry's 2016 cask edition, of which only 5,000 bottles were produced.

FAIRMONT COPLEY PLAZA, 138 ST. JAMES AVE., BOSTON (617-585-7222) OAKLONGBARKITCHEN.COM

TAPPED IN With all of the new taproom openings—Everett's Down the Road debuted in November and Trillium's Roslindale beer garden is slated to open in December—perhaps you missed this tidbit. Beer lovers can soon enjoy two Clown Shoes brews at the Harpoon Beer Hall in the Seaport. Harpoon acquired the Ipswich brewer in late October and the brewery will start offering Boston-brewed Galactica (Double IPA) and Chocolate Sombrero (Mexican Chocolate Stout) in late November.

NOT YOUR DAD'S DELI

A NEW CONCEPT ARRIVES WITH ELEVATED JEWISH FARE

OUR FATHERS RESTAURANT AND DELI
196 N Harvard St., Boston
ourfathersdeli.com

As the latest full-service Boston installment from the Franklin Restaurant Group, Our Fathers Restaurant, Bar and Deli will bring two concepts to one Allston location. Chef Jameson Poll's elevated takes on traditional Jewish cooking will be the focus of the restaurant offerings, while takeout options are available starting at 7 am on weekdays and 9 am on weekends.

"Our restaurants are always neighborhood restaurants," says owner Dave DuBois, whose other ventures include Franklin Cafe and Citizen Public House & Oyster Bar, as well as fast-casual chain Tasty Burger. "What differentiates it is just the caliber of food and that this style of food is so unique. I think that with Jameson on board, he's bringing a whole different level to it."

The restaurant menu, consisting of a variety of small appetizers and shareable plates, will feature several dishes utilizing spice-driven flavors from the Sephardic Jews of the Iberian Peninsula and the Mizrahi Jews of the Middle East, such as challah-wrapped cod with coconut curry nage, mussels, turnips and winter greens, and lamb on cinnamon sticks with tehina and pomegranate seeds. The casual takeout fare from the deli will include breakfast sandwiches, bagels, soups, pastries and made-to-order sandwiches and salads.

At the bar, the gin-centric cocktail menu curated by beverage manager Kayla Quigley will boast drinks such as the WC Fields with Malfy Con Limone gin, Dry Curacao, cranberry syrup, lemon bitters and egg white.

"In our bars, we try pretty hard to pick a particular type of spirit and really concentrate on that spirit," says DuBois, who notes that some local distillers such as Bully Boy and Wire Works will be making batches that are exclusive to Our Fathers. "We feel like gin is such a sophisticated spirit with so much range that we can really introduce a whole different side of it to people that they're not normally used to."

The space boasts a midcentury modern feel with wooden overtones, fixtures from the '40s, '50s and '60s, and a dining room that seats about 90 (including seating for eight at the chef's table in the deli after hours). With a menu blending tradition and innovation, DuBois hopes that Our Fathers will broaden diners' views of modern Jewish cuisine when it opens in December.

"I'm excited for people to come and get a great pastrami sandwich and a perfect bowl of Matzo ball soup," DuBois says. "But I'm also excited about them being able to come in and taste food that will expand their idea of what Jewish cooking is and reflect what Jews all over the world are cooking today."

ROLL TIDE: Eventide Fenway's location is the group's first spot outside of Maine.

Good Eats: Fishful Thinking

Inspired by beachside seafood shacks, Eventide Fenway is Maine-based Big Tree Hospitality's first foray into Massachusetts, joining Portland eateries Eventide Oyster Co., Hugo's and the Honey Paw. One of the menu's stars is the fish sandwich—the hipper, younger cousin of the classic fish filet. Served on a sesame seed bun, the fried, panko-crusted hake's topped with pickles, lettuce and a homemade tartar sauce that brings a burst of summer on a gray afternoon. According to Big Tree co-founder Andrew Taylor, the secret to the deep flavor is a dressing cribbed from Japanese cuisine: "Tare is a rich, soy-based sauce that we drizzle over the filet for just a little additional umami flavor." / Nathan Tavares

QUE SYRAH SYRAH

Syrah may lack the gracefulness of pinot noir and the flashy, unbridled power of cabernet sauvignon, but there's no question it deserves a perch atop the pantheon of the world's noblest red wine grapes. With aromatic intrigue and length of flavor, it's got equivalent potential for terroir expression and aging, and is an absolute virtuoso with food—not to mention a screaming bargain. If you travel the world, you'll be impressed by how good, and how moderately priced, the local syrah is. Check out these blind-tasting winners for a sampling. / Sandy Block

HEDGES DLD CUVEE DUPONT SYRAH, RED MOUNTAIN, 2012
Many insiders believe that this grape is most suited to the dry, high desert conditions of eastern Washington, and there are some cult bottlings from sites throughout the state, where it was first planted in 1986. This nice, smooth bottle from a 15-acre vineyard on Red Mountain is quintessential syrah: aromas of coffee, smoke and berry jam, with ripe, red fruit flavors and a hot spicy finish. It pairs great with grilled steak or tuna.
$34, Urbon Grape, South End

MITOLO JESTER SHIRAZ, MCLAREN VALE, 2015
The Aussies call it shiraz, but it's the same grape. McLaren Vale's temperate oceanic-influenced climate and long growing season create sleek, balanced shiraz; and this one is the epitome of brightness with a profusion of crushed dark raspberry, clove, cocoa and black pepper notes. The rich, lush, intensely concentrated wine has seductive round tannins that coat the palate, a natural partner for thick, wintery stews (or leftover turkey).
$15, Wegmons, Westwood

SANTA RITA RESERVA SYRAH, MAIPO VALLEY, 2015
Chile's history with syrah only dates back about 20 years, so the country's vines are relatively young. Santa Rita Reserva is a juicy style with floral red and black berry notes, hints of licorice and tobacco, and a mellow, silky texture. It's extremely well proportioned, medium in body and has a peppery finish that plays exceptionally well with Latin fare.
$13, Common Vines, Downtown Crossing

Instant Returns

Pop culture can't quite shake the fascination with Polaroid and those painterly hued shots surrounded by the iconic white border. Hence, new brand Polaroid Originals' effort to resurrect instant photography with the OneStep 2 analog instant camera ($100), launched just in time to celebrate the 80th anniversary of Polaroid's founding.

Started in 1937 by Edwin Land, the Cambridge-based Polaroid company democratized instant photography with the 1972 release of its SX-70, followed by a host of other innovations, such as the more affordable OneStep camera, all of which not only influenced a whole generation of artists from Andy Warhol to Robert Mapplethorpe, but made capturing family vacation photos a snap. In 2008, Polaroid announced the end of its film production thanks largely to the cameras every cellphone owner turned amateur photographer carries at all times, but a group of analog superfans (and former employees) dubbed the Impossible Project swooped in to buy the company's last remaining factory in hopes of keeping the medium alive. And this spring, the Impossible Project got a whole lot more possible when its largest stakeholder acquired the Polaroid brand and started Polaroid Originals.

For instant photography's from-the-ashes bounce back, the Impossible Project's CEO Oskar Smolokowski looks to—ironically—the same technology behind the medium's initial fall. "With everyone having an amazing digital camera in their pockets in the shape of their smartphones and snapping away multiple times per day, the digital photo became less... important, for lack of a better word, to mark a moment." Smolokowski says. "Creating a physical artifact, a Polaroid photograph from a special moment definitely has more intent in it, and therefore more weight to it." / Nathan Tavares

Impossible Dreamer

An actor, singer, dancer and teacher, Maurice Emmanuel Parent has wanted to be on stage ever since thinking, "I can do that!" as a mesmerized fourth-grader watching a talent show at his Maryland Catholic school. We caught up with the Boston theater veteran before he chases impossible dreams as Cervantes/Don Quixote in New Repertory Theatre's Mon of Lo Moncho, directed by Antonio Ocampo-Guzman at the Mosesian Center for the Arts on Dec. 1-24. / Nothan Tavares

SO MUCH OF THE PLAY IS ABOUT RESILIENCE AND HOPE. DOES THAT RESONATE TODAY? Antonio taps into that in this production, this idea of being so in the midst of all these horrors and atrocities and trying to leave the world better than you found it. That's ultimately what drives me personally. .. My impossible dream is that in the midst of all the horrors of the world, Maurice in some small way can make something better.

DO YOU HAVE A DREAM ROLE? Quixote was one. Evita, I just want to be in it. I would be Ensemble, Second from the Left for Evita. [Laughs.] I would be anything that anyone would want me to be in that show, I just love it so much. . I love certain classics like Les Mis; I would do anything in that show as well.

WHY DID YOU DECIDE TO CO-FOUND THE FRONT PORCH ARTS COLLECTIVE, WHICH CELEBRATES STORIES THAT EXPLORE THE AFRICAN DIASPORA? Every major city has a black theater company as a part of their theater scene, and we wanted to up the access and representation for people of color on stage and in the audiences, and at the same time make sure that everybody of all races and walks of life are welcome. The greater purpose of showing ethnically specific theater is to help people see the world through other vantage points that they may not have access to. That's learning. That's growing

THE TWISTS OF TRAUMA

TROUBLED PASTS INTERSECT IN BUDAPEST

Strangers in Budapest* by Jessica Keener
Published by Algonquin Books of Chapel Hill,
340 pages, $27

MORAL DILEMMAS AND QUESTIONS abound in local author Jessica Keener's second novel, Strangers in Budapest. The story focuses on Will and Anna, who move from Massachusetts to Budapest, Hungary, with their adopted baby, Leo, for Will's not-yet-jelled business. Eight months later, they meet Edward Weiss, an angry older man who believes his troubled daughter Deborah was murdered by her Hungarian husband. Although the encounter and other events awaken memories of personal tragedies Anna's running from, she agrees to help Edward—against Will's wishes.

Keener reveals the poisonous mulch of trauma lurking within both Edward and his possibly murderous son-in-law who were traumatized in Hungary: Edward in World War II, and his son-in-law in the 1956 revolution. Edward's thoughts play out through a monologue of bitterness and malicious intent, while his woes are confounded by the negative memories of his dead daughter, who he saw as a magnet for losers such as her husband. Anna, at times ambivalent and at times empathetic, suffers through Edward's rudeness.

Some comic relief comes from Will's former boss Bernardo, who's full of crude opportunism. He brings a breath of American air—though not entirely fresh—to Hungary. Meanwhile, Keener depicts Budapest as its own character, with beauty, suffering and colorful revolutionary attitudes. Full of suspense and sorrow, the novel portrays a need for resolution through revenge—psychological and political.

PICTURESQUE Santa Fe mixes natural beauty with a vibrant arts scene

EMBRACE THE OLD

TAKE A TRIP BACK IN TIME IN NEW MEXICO'S SANTA FE

WE BOSTONIANS TEND TO THINK that within the U.S., terms like "oldest" and "most historic" belong almost exclusively to us, with Johnny-come-latelies like Philadelphia and New York bringing up the rear. Rarely, if ever, do we look farther west—a tremendous mistake, given that New Mexico's capital was founded in 1607, a good 23 years before Boston was incorporated. Not only is Santa Fe the oldest state capital in the country, it's also the highest, with an altitude of 7,199 feet. But superlatives aside, it's a magically captivating place that delights at every turn, with tremendous natural beauty, one of the most vibrant arts and culinary scenes in the country, and a unique charm found nowhere else in the American West.

Art lies around every corner in Santa Fe, whether it's a brilliantly painted arcade off the main plaza, a large public sculpture or a temporary installation made of organic materials that will wash away at the next rainfall. However, the art scene's ground zero is indisputably Canyon Road, a half-mile stretch that boasts more than 100 galleries, as well as artists' studios, co-ops and cafes and restaurants to offer the sustenance necessary to take it all in. Our top pick for food: The Teahouse, a popular gathering spot (owned by a transplanted Bostonian, no less) with a staggering collection of teas from around the world and an extensive menu of superb food that includes options like eggs Benedict made with brisket instead of ham. To absorb the myriad riches Canyon Road has to offer, we suggest an afternoon with Santa Fe Art Tours, founded by art historian Elaine Ritchel, who takes an interactive approach accessible even to youngsters. The Santa Fe native asks each member of a tour to choose a favorite piece in a gallery and explains methodology for critiquing art—like the "Feldman Method"—while providing an entrée to artists' studios and collaboratives that tenderfoots would never stumble upon on their own.

The city's patron artistic saint is Georgia O'Keeffe, and a trip to the museum named for her is a mandatory pilgrimage. Opened in 1997, 11 years after the artist's death, the Georgia O'Keeffe Museum boasts a collection of 3,000 works that give insight into her art, creative process and inspirations. Equally a must is the New Mexico History Museum, which hems in one side of the Santa Fe Plaza and not only tells the city's history from Neolithic times to the present but also houses the Palace of Governors, one of America's oldest public buildings and the seat of government since the early 17th century.

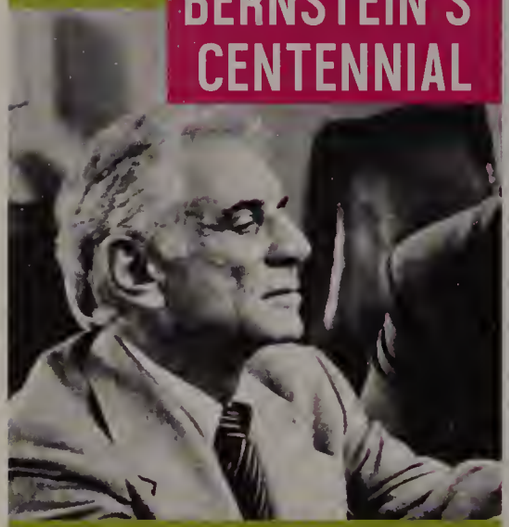
Santa Fe has been a thriving artists' colony for more than a century, but lest the city's gallery and museum offerings seem a tad traditional and staid, one of the most mind-bending and unique art experiences in America can be found at Meow Wolf. Created by a group of young artists working in a variety of mediums that don't fit within conventional exhibition parameters—think musical lasers—the group banded together to take over what was once a bowling alley in an industrial part of town. The attraction is an art installation called the House of Eternal Return. Upon entering the interactive space, visitors are confronted by a re-creation of what seems like a standard suburban home, except that small things seem slightly off. Upon closer inspection, portals to "another dimension" are accessed by walking through the fireplace or crawling into the washing machine, exposing visitors to experiences like standing inside a giant mastodon skeleton whose rib cage can be played like a xylophone and interacting with aliens. Appropriate for all ages, it's a haunted house meets art installation, and it's as cutting edge and avant-garde as anything to be found in Berlin, Tokyo or New York.

No trip to Santa Fe can be considered complete without sampling the cuisine—a fusion of Spanish, Mediterranean, Pueblo, Native American and Cowboy Chuckwagon influences—including a taste of a green chili cheeseburger at Santa Fe Bite, where the burgers are cooked to order and the selection of local brews to wash it down is impressive. For traditional New Mexican cuisine, a favorite among the cognoscenti is The Shed, a rowdy, always-crowded eatery squeezed into a rabbit's warren of rooms right off the plaza. However, for those in search of a more elevated dining experience, head to Eloisa. Owned by award-winning chef Rivera Sedlar and named after his grandmother, it's located in the (otherwise unprepossessing) Drury Plaza Hotel. The ultra-contemporary restaurant offers a tasting menu known as the O'Keeffe Table: Sedlar's great-aunt (Eloisa's sister) was Georgia O'Keeffe's personal chef at her legendary Ghost Ranch, and for $70 per person, Sedlar creates a multicourse feast based upon the artist's life and work, served in a highly artistic and dramatic fashion such as caviar atop a cow's skull.



Everything in Santa Fe takes place against the backdrop of the heart-stoppingly beautiful Sangre de Christo Mountains, and whether you want to spend your days shopping, people-watching, or just soaking it all in, the visuals are never short of arresting, which is undoubtedly why the city is such a hotbed of creativity. ◆

FIRE IN THE HOLE

PRAIRIE FIRE BRINGS A WOOD-FIRED GLOW (AND KILLER PIZZAS) TO COOLIDGE CORNER

IF THERE'S A 2017 RESTAURANT TREND we're grateful for as winter approaches, it's Boston chefs' new fondness for the many flavors that wood-fire can bestow. Prairie Fire, recently alit in Coolidge Corner, is from the partners behind Milton's beloved Steel & Rye, who also lent their chef Brendan Joy to this new venture. Like its elder sibling, it aims elemental with simple American fare in a sleek, spare setting designed to cultivate regular neighborhood trade. But the concept is less expansive, focusing instead on a few dishes, many of them passing through the wood-fired oven behind the bar, including seafood, vegetables, salads and especially pizza.

Pizza is a useful starting point here, as it represents by itself a fine reason to visit. Joy spent five years tending to a sourdough starter, which is used in dough that's conditioned for a day and then shaped into a thick-edged, thin-crusted pie that spends just enough time in the oven to gain a light char all around its edges and underside. Pies are topped by simple, beautiful ingredients, such as a classic Margherita ($14) that would do a Neapolitan pizzaiola proud with its classic trinity of simple San Marzano tomato sauce, leaves of fresh basil and squares of fresh mozzarella: hard to improve upon. Fennel sausage ($16) offers meatier complexity (and lots of lovely, if unadvertised, red onions), with more red sauce plus shreds of fennel and copious dots of fresh ricotta. White pizza ($15) brings the salty snap of guanciale, gooey fontina and earthy bits of cauliflower and Brussels sprout leaves to its creamy, delectable white sauce.

Small plates include raw oysters ($3 each) with a mild cider mignonette, deeply briny Merrys from Duxbury with a rich alkaline finish one night. Wood-roasted oysters ($4 each) are nicely, barely cooked, with a gentle drizzle of garlicky scampi butter, lemon and breadcrumbs, though wood smoke again provides the best accent. Beneath wafers of watermelon radish, fluke crudo ($14) hides lovely chunks of mild local fish, barely marinated in sweet/tangy husk-cherry agrodolce: pretty, not overchilled, delicious. Chicken and pork meatballs ($8) are three smallish specimens in more of that terrific red sauce, given salt and crunch with Parmesan and gribenes, all topped with a hunk of wood-grilled bread for heft.

The oven again applies virtuous depth to generous vegetable dishes, including kale-like broccoli greens ($8) with a roasted garlic dressing and toasted sesame and pumpkin seeds for crunch, and most of a head of pan-fried cauliflower ($8) given needed piquancy with smoked aioli, caper vinaigrette and anchovy breadcrumbs. Only coffee-roasted sunchokes ($9) with a rich brown butter béarnaise are a bust thanks to indifferent prep: too many woody bits and some grit. Smoke and char elevate salads like the radicchio Caesar ($13) with crisp rounds of fried Parmesan and shreds of smoked egg: vivid and beautiful. Grilling the suddenly ubiquitous Little Gem lettuce ($12) gives it the charry heft to stand up to crispy shallots and more toasted seeds, all softened by a thick buttermilk dressing.

Chef Joy developed some serious pasta-making chops somewhere. His black garlic spaghetti ($22) has a lovely inky color, given weight with nine plump shelled littlenecks and more salty guanciale, though oversaucing muddies the effect a bit. There's nothing to complain about in his gorgeous ebony squid-ink campanelle ($24) with chunks of Maine lobster in a bright, tangy, slightly fiery arrabiata sauce: it's phenomenal. Of two desserts, we sampled the roasted chocolate bar ($9), a thin wafer of excellent chocolate that's made crispy with an admixture of crushed crepes, alongside smoked maple granola, milk chocolate mousse and the much-better-than-it-sounds mushroom ice cream, all adding up wondrously.

The beverage program seems more about finding modest accompaniments to food than serving as a drinking destination. That means a dozen draft beers and five packaged ones ($7-$12, large formats $35-$65), the selection mostly local and tilting very beer-nerdy. Wines by the glass (8 whites, 2 sparklers, 8 reds running $9-$13) and 16 bottles ($38-$70) offer decent prices and plenty of food-friendly flavors. We savored a 2015 Montenidoli ($38) from San Gimignano in Tuscany with the deep color but easy-drinking dark fruit of the colorino grape. Among the specialty cocktails ($9-$11), the Showdown ($9) of blended scotch, crème de cassis and ginger beer served as a bracing cold-weather highball, though the bar also showed deft technical competence with classics like Manhattans, daiquiris and Negronis ($11-$12).

The room, with 24 bar seats and 50 at tables, has an admirably modern, understated aesthetic, drawing from a palette of black, white, blond and gray in leather banquettes, wood tables, bent wood bar seating and wooden floors, all flatteringly lit by soft yellow interior lights, live votive candles, streetlight through tall windows, and the glow of the wood oven. Service has a professional, easygoing polish to it, suiting the casual menu and chic, simple setting. In all, Prairie Fire succeeds by circumscribing its ambitions to a short menu with a very clear-cut sensibility, then knocking the hell out of the dishes that fit that narrower scope. When you can wring as many flavors from one wood-fired oven as this place does, less can indeed be much more. ◆

Q: I AM THIN AND MY CHEEKS ARE LOOKING MORE SUNKEN AS I AGE. CAN I PREVENT THIS?

A: Well, you can't prevent this from happening, but we can help you! As we age, the fat in our face starts to dissipate and our faces become more thin and gaunt. Ultimately, this results in wrinkles, skin laxity and jowling in the lower part of our face. Luckily, by using facial fillers to safely replace the volume that is lost, we can manage the aging process so that your appearance is greatly improved.

Juvederm Voluma , Restylane Lyft, and Radiesse are three of the safe and effective fillers that are injected in the cheeks to replace the fat that we have lost. This added volume subtly fills in the cheek area and looks very natural. The injections are not painful and the results will last for up to two years.

BLAND OF THE DEAD

NOT SO LOCO FOR COCO, PIXAR'S LATEST EFFORT

With its 19th film in 22 years, Pixar Animation Studios has finally addressed the lack of ethnic diversity in its movies, having already tackled another deficiency with 2012's Brave and 2015's Inside Out, a pair of pictures that featured strong starring roles for female protagonists.

At a time when xenophobia runs rampant, and talk of building a wall along the Mexican border continues, it's nice to see a family film take pains to humanize our neighbors to the south without coming off as a polemic. But then, Pixar—the most successful movie division within the Disney umbrella—has rarely been accused of preaching. Rather, it's easily the best purveyor of animated entertainment with universal appeal.

So it's unfortunate that Coco—Pixar's colorful celebration of Mexico's people, cultures and traditions—lacked the emotional core that's the hallmark of some of the studio's finest efforts such as Wall-E and Up. Despite a typically gorgeous adventure that journeys from the Land of the Living to the Land of the Dead and back, Coco ranks with recent efforts like 2015's The Good Dinosaur and the aforementioned Brave, minor works that, while dazzling to look at, failed to fully engage my heart.

Starring a rebellious 12-year-old, aspiring singer and self-taught guitarist Miguel Rivera (voiced by newcomer Anthony Gonzalez), the film opens in the fictional Mexican village of Santa Cecilia during Día de Muertos (or "Day of the Dead"). Recalling Remy, the rodent who dared to become an unlikely Parisian chef in Pixar's 2007 gem, Ratatouille, Miguel is a defiant dreamer, stubbornly pursuing his passion despite the protests of his closed-minded family. Following in the footsteps of his idol, Ernesto de la Cruz (voiced with great pomposity by Benjamin Bratt), the lad desperately longs to share the hidden talents he's nurtured in an attic hideout.

Alas, he's descended from a tight-knit clan of shoemakers who've forbidden songs from their home for generations, a ban that's strictly enforced by his grandmother, Abuelita (Renée Victor of Showtime's Weeds), whose grandfather abandoned his wife and daughter to pursue a career as a mariachi. Needless to say, it doesn't go over well when Miguel sets out to prove that making music can be beautiful, rather than shameful.

It's nice to see a family film that takes pains to humanize our neighbors to the south.

Fueled by his love of the black-and-white musicals starring de la Cruz and the silky ballads that he sang in them, Miguel plans on persuading his family by performing in Santa Cecilia's annual Día de Muertos talent show, taking place in the town square where de la Cruz got his start. But Abuelita won't have it and she smashes the boy's guitar after discovering her grandson's secret shrine to his hero.

Undeterred, Miguel hatches a plan to sneak into the mausoleum housing de la Cruz's remains—but more importantly, the star's guitar, which Miguel intends to steal for use in the competition. However, the theft unleashes a curse that sends him and his endearingly daft dog, a hairless Xoloitzcuintli named Dante (already a star of his own short film, Dante's Lunch), to an imaginatively realized underworld populated by cuddly cadavers, including Héctor (Gael García Bernal, star of Amazon's Mozart in the Jungle), a skeletal con artist who claims to know de la Cruz, whose star shines even brighter in the afterlife. In exchange for introducing our protagonist to his deceased hero (who may hold the key to Miguel's return to the Land of the Living), Héctor enlists the boy's aid to ensure that his living family doesn't forget him on the Other Side.

Speaking of family, Miguel has just as many dead kin as living ones, and he spends much of his adventure evading the remains of Mamá Imelda (Alanna Ubach), his great-great-grandmother and founder of the Rivera's shoemaking business, since she's the source of the family's music ban. She's also the mother of the titular Coco (83-year-old pro Ana Ofelia Murguía), Miguel's oldest living relative, whose deeply etched wrinkles are a thing of beauty.

It's just a shame that the storytelling can't quite match Pixar's superbly rendered visuals. Director Lee Unkrich (Toy Story 3) and co-director Adrian Molina (who both had a hand in the film's script) too often teletype their plot's developments, leaving the strings exposed as they pull them. And for all the focus on music, the original score by Michael Giacchino (who's provided the emotional backbone of some of Pixar's best, from The Incredibles to his Oscar-winning work on Up) is atypically underwhelming, as are the original songs courtesy of Kristen Anderson-Lopez and Robert Lopez, the Academy Award-winning songwriters behind Disney's Frozen. It says a lot that a maudlin ballad entitled "Remember Me" would prove so unmemorable. Kind of like the film. ◆

DRUMMER SPREADS GRATEFUL DEAD CATALOG ACROSS FRESH CANVAS

When Joe Russo dove into the deep well of Grateful Dead music with alumni Bob Weir and Phil Lesh in their offshoot group Furthur, the drummer never figured that he'd launch his own band to tap the same reservoir.

He describes Joe Russo's Almost Dead as a "lucky goof," an idea to fill the second night of a 2013 Brooklyn Bowl party that began with his Led Zeppelin cover outfit Bustle in Your Hedgerow. Yet the quintet soon transcended other bands that interpret the Grateful Dead songbook, pushing the parameters of those venerated tunes with fiercely creative improvising.

"We're constantly in awe of what it's become," Russo says of JRAD, which returns to House of Blues on Dec. 8 and 9. "It was exciting to spend all that time learning the language of the Grateful Dead and then speaking it with my friends."

Indeed, it's about the peer relationships that Russo, 40, forged for decades. He met keyboardist Marco Benevento during middle school in New Jersey. Bassist Dave Dreiwitz (of the band Ween) and guitarist/singer Scott Metzger, both from Jersey, guested with the Benevento/Russo Duo (which also briefly merged into a quartet with Phish's Trey Anastasio and Mike Gordon in 2006). Only Philly guitarist/singer Tom Hamilton, whose band American Babies once included Russo, came into JRAD with an early indoctrination to the Dead.

Russo instead grew up as a metal-head who worshipped Black Sabbath and Iron Maiden. "I talked mad shit about the Grateful Dead when I was a kid," he says. "I got to high school and [students] were all wearing tie-dye and I was still wearing my black T-shirt. It took me a lot longer to get there."

Now he's glad for the evolution, while suggesting that if he heard adventurous Dead fare like "King Solomon's Marbles" from 1975's Blues for Allah in his teens, he might have been hooked then. Russo particularly favors the early Dead from the late '60s for its raw, aggressive attack. "There's a punk element to it," he says. "Nothing was really pensive. It struck me as so uncalculated."

"It was exciting to spend all that time learning the language of the Grateful Dead and then speaking it with my friends."

In turn, JRAD bucks expectations beyond stretching traditional Dead epics like "Terrapin Station" or "The Other One." A straightforward tune like "Althea" or "Throwing Stones" can also divert into a jam that highlights a set.

"There's no programming in the sense that 'This is a first-set song' or 'This song goes like this,'" Russo says. "We're not tethered to these ideals that everybody else playing this music seems to be tethered to."

The same goes for genre-crossing teases as well as tunes close to the Dead sphere, like those of Bob Dylan or the Band. "We're a bit tease-heavy as a band," Russo says, noting that they try to amuse both fans and themselves. "Somebody will play something and all of a sudden we're playing a Lorde song. Again, we don't paint ourselves into a corner where we're not allowed to do something. ... Those are the true moments, where you're having a conversation with a friend."

One week after the JRAD shows, Russo will return to town with newer friends for Alone & Together. That Dec. 16 concert at Royale features singer/songwriters Elvis Perkins, Eric D. Johnson (of Fruit Bats), Josh Kaufman and Sam Cohen, who shares a studio with Russo and once co-fronted Boston's Apollo Sunshine.

It's essentially a song swap where they sing one another's music. "This one just clicked because of the personalities," Russo says of the recurring series that hit Newport Folk this year, with Kevin Morby in Perkins' spot. "I'm kind of getting to be a fan while being onstage with these guys, just playing a supportive role."

Russo writes as well, but don't expect to hear his tunes at House of Blues. "While we take the improv route, writing music for [JRAD] at this point seems odd," he says. "People want to hear these amazing songs by the Grateful Dead or [in that] canon, and they want to hear us play the cracks in between."

His old Furthur bosses are cool about JRAD too, says Russo, who just saw Weir fronting Dead and Company. "Bob busts our balls for playing too fast." ◆

SURF'S UP

THE ULTIMATE QUEST TO RIDE THE GNARLIEST WAVE EVER—OR REALLY ANY WAVE

MY LIFE IS LITTERED WITH THE detritus of halfhearted ambitions. For instance, a few years ago I decided it would be cool to learn how to play the guitar, so I bought an electric guitar and software that teaches you how to play. As soon as you fire up the program, it gives you a little pep talk about how easy it is to play the guitar—for basic proficiency, all you have to do is practice an hour a day for 60 consecutive days! I did the math and figured out that that's, like, 60 hours. Which is about 59 hours more than I ultimately devoted to learning the guitar.

That's OK. You get to a point where you realize that certain corridors of coolness are closed. I'm not a guitar guy. It's too late. Same deal with other cool skills, like snowboarding or being Australian. But I can surf. Or at least pretend that I do.

I've never thought of myself as a surfer. The whole surfer lifestyle seems too involved. Like, would I have to unironically call people "brah" and put stickers on my laptop? I'm not a stickers-on-the-laptop kind of guy. I mean, yeah, it's a MacBook, but it's for business! And what about my hair? Do you get a free bottle of Sun In when you buy a shell necklace? I feel like I'm on the outside of surf culture looking in.

But after one of the fall hurricanes, I went to the beach with a couple of friends who surf. They appeared to be having the best time of their lives, while I stood on shore taking photos to show them how much fun they'd had. Eventually, I started to wonder: Why am I here on the beach and not out there with them? Aside from the facts that I'm a terrible swimmer who's afraid of sharks, hates cold and has terrible balance, I couldn't think of a single thing.

So I pulled the trigger and bought a surfboard, a huge foam-topped model that may as well have training wheels bolted to the sides. My wife got me a wetsuit top that makes me look like a delicious seal from the waist up. Finally, I ordered a Dakine tailgate protector for my Bronco. It has a strap on the top, so the board sticks out over the tailgate. Thing looks pretty gnar, brah. It's possible that I've driven places with the surfboard in the Bronco without having any intention of actually surfing. I just want people to ask me where the breaks are so I can laugh at them for thinking I'd reveal surfer secrets. Figure it out yourself, grommet. Locals only!

Sorry, I got carried away there with my surf lingo, which we surfers use. Part of the surf learning curve involves language. Like, what you would call "a bunch of waves with sharks in them" we call "sets." What you would call, "waves about as high as a small shark," we call "knee to waist-high." And what you would call "bloodthirsty man-eating sharks everywhere," we call, "we don't think about that."

You'll notice that I use the term "we" because I am now a surfer. My first time out with my new board, which is roughly the size of a lifeboat on the Symphony of the Seas, I stand up and ride at least three waves, probably for a cumulative five seconds. But that's all it takes. You're either a surfer or you're not. And a bad surfer is still cooler than the guy on the beach taking photos.

Or possibly not. That first day, I'm glad that I'm alone. Because when you're learning to surf, there will be a moment or two when you look less than dignified. On one of my early attempts, I accelerate so quickly that the board sort of scoots out ahead of me, and I topple into the wave with the gentle grace of a man abruptly shoved out of a low-flying helicopter. When I surface, I see that the force of my wipeout peeled up my wetsuit top up to my nipples, Jacques Cousteau-meets-Spring Break. Woo, beads from King Neptune! I also feel like my right leg is now several inches longer than my left, since the surf leash tethers that right leg to the nine-foot foam projectile that just attempted to launch itself three miles inland.

I head back out and keep trying. It's a workout, what with all the paddling and trying to stand up. I miss waves, I wipe out, I scream obscenities. I sit on the board and scan the water for grey fins. It's cathartic. And after an hour or so, I've caught a few legitimate rides. Enough that when I walk back across the beach with my leviathan surfboard, I feel a little like less of a fraud than I did on my way in. Did you know that "King of the Surf Guitar" Dick Dale grew up in Quincy? So unless he was boogie-boarding behind flounder boats off Nut Island, he didn't start right away either.

Which implies that maybe there's hope for me. For surfing, I mean. Not the guitar. If I'm going to spend 60 hours learning anything, it would be a language. I'm thinking Australian. ◆

It's possible that I've driven places with the surfboard in the Bronco without having any intention of actually surfing.

PROVEN MEDAL

THE OLYMPIC CHAMP CHATS ABOUT BEIJING, PARTY TRICKS AND GOLDEN ADVICE

OLYMPIC GYMNAST TURNED ENTREPRENEUR NASTIA Liukin, 28, was born in Moscow, Russia, and raised in Dallas. At the Olympics in 2008, she won five medals for the U.S., including the gold in the all-around competition. She also earned nine medals in the World Championships during her career. After retiring, she's modeled for BCBG/Max Azria, launched a signature clothing line—Supergirl by Nastia—at JC Penney and competed on Dancing With the Stars. In 2016, she graduated from New York University, and she now lives in Boston with her fiance, former BC hockey player Matt Lombardi.

JONATHAN SOROFF: What are the three qualities every top gymnast has?
NASTIA LIUKIN: Dedication, determination, and a little bit of crazy.

You've competed all over the world. Favorite place? Well, Beijing was extremely special, because it's where I became an Olympic gold medalist. But it's funny. I was there for an entire month, and I never got to see the Great Wall, or see and do anything along those lines. I didn't really see much of the city, although every time I hear the word "Beijing," it just resonates because that was such a memorable moment.

Ever look back at footage of yourself and say, "What was I thinking with that outfit?" I've had a few "What was I thinking?" moments. I think it's more like, when I look back at the Olympics, I was 18 years old, and I was wearing this hot-pink leotard with a matching pink scrunchy. So that's my embarrassing moment, but at the time, as a gymnast, that was kind of just what you did.

Did you decide to win the gold just because it matches your hair? [Laughs.] That's a good one. It's funny, because I get asked a lot if I did my own hair and makeup for the competition. I did, and I barely wore any makeup, except for a little bit of gold eye shadow.

When you're a gymnast, what's the thing that just hurts all the time? Your hands. I always did a lot of uneven bars, and the callouses on my hands were just awful.

Body part you can touch that I can't? I can do a ring kick backward, so that my heel can touch my forehead.

Definitely something I can't do. Fashion trend you're most sick of? I get rid of a lot of clothes, so I feel like everything in my closet is what I actually wear. I purge about once a season. But I'll go with bandage dresses. Those need to go, in my opinion.

Designer you'd most like to be compared to? I'm going to go with Stella McCartney.

Isn't it unfair to have a champion gymnast on Dancing With the Stars? Yes. There are definitely advantages that I had, like picking up routines a little bit quicker. I was used to choreography. But then I do have to say that there are so many things that were a lot harder for me. I was so used to being on the floor by myself, so dancing with a partner and having someone all up in my space was strange for me. Also, doing everything in heels. I was used to being barefoot all the time. Trying to learn how to dance in heels was different. I had also never taken dance in my entire life, so trying to salsa or samba in front of millions of people was intimidating. But any athlete has an advantage.

Party trick you use to show off in front of large groups of people? Well, I always get asked, no matter where I am, whether it's with little kids or adults, if I can do a flip. I feel like that's just kinda going to stick with me for the rest of my life, because that's just what people want to see from a gymnast.

What skill would people be surprised to learn you have? [Laughs.] I feel like literally every egg in my basket went into gymnastics. I don't have any other weird talents. I don't know how to sew, which is really sad. I like to cook, but my fiance is a better cook than I am, so he just does it and lets me clean up.

Matt Lombardi is a better cook than you are? Oh, yeah. He's great in the kitchen.

Were you a hockey fan before you met him? Not really. Growing up in Texas, I went to some Dallas Stars games, and when I was living in New York, I went to some Rangers games, but not really.

Can you skate? No, I cannot. I tried once or twice. What I learned is that the correct posture for gymnastics, which is shoulders back, doesn't really work on the ice, because you fall backward.

If you could have any superpower, what would it be? Probably being able to teleport. We live in Boston, but we spend a lot of time in LA, and that flight is just brutal. So it would be great to just snap my fingers and be there.

"My full name is actually Anastasia, and I never went by it.... As I got older, I thought, 'I wish I'd just gone by Anastasia.'"

Will Boston stay your home, or are you and Matt nomads? No. I really finally feel like we've created our home here. I was born in Moscow, grew up in Dallas. I moved to New York to go to NYU, and I literally moved apartments every single year. So I've felt like I really didn't have a home since I moved out of my parents' house at 19. Finally, I feel like we've established a base, and when I'm on the road, I can't wait to get back to Boston.

Growing up, did kids make fun of your name? Oh, yes. All the time. My full name is actually Anastasia, and I never went by it. I don't know why. Nastia is the typical Russian short version of it, but as I got older, I thought, "I wish I'd just gone by Anastasia."

What advice would you give an aspiring gymnast? My golden piece of advice—which is something my mom always told me—was: "You can never quit on a bad day." After a bad day of training, I'd say I wanted to stop, and she'd say, "That's fine, but not today." She'd make me go back to the gym until I had a good day, and then she'd say, "You can make that decision." But after a good day, of course, I never wanted to quit. I think that piece of advice applies across the board in life.

How do you want to be remembered? That's a really great question, because obviously the medals are amazing, but I don't want to be remembered just for winning five Olympic medals. Right now, I'm working on a new business and a new project with my fiance. It's an app called Grander Sports. Our hope is to inspire the next generation of female athletes in all sports. With so much going on with women, we want to create a safe community where these girls can be heard and ask questions and feel comfortable. So I hope to be remembered for inspiring the next generation. ◆

PERFORMING ARTS

Edited by Nathan Tavares

BRANCHING OUT Best known as the woodworking mustachioed Ron Swanson on Parks and Recreation, Nick Offerman is quick to distance himself from the character, even singing a song titled "I'm Not Ron Swanson" on his current Full Bush tour. The multihyphenate got his start as a classically trained actor, and later flexed his chops in the Huntington Theatre Company's A Confederacy of Dunces in 2015. These days, with a deadpan-yet-giddy delivery, Offerman is singing along with a ukulele he made himself, and offering advice on approaching life with enthusiasm. (Aside from the, er, obvious connotation, the show title is in reference to this philosophy.) Let's not beat around the bush: Head to the Wilbur to catch Offerman in action on Dec. 2. / Brenna Donovan

MOVIES

WONDER ★★★1/2 The trailers for Wonder were worrisome, making it look like a mawkish tear-jerker designed to exploit Julia Roberts' glassy eyes and megawatt smile as she plays Isabel Pullman, mother of a sweet 10-year-old named Auggie (Jaeob Tremblay, the talented star of 2015's Room), a boy who's had to endure 27 operations to deal with a facial deformity. But you should have faith in filmmaker Stephen Chbosky, who made a splash with The Perks of Being a Wallflower, the semi-autobiographical high school drama he adapted from his own novel. Now, he's working from someone else's novel, a best-seller by R.J. Palaeio that has transitioned splendidly to the big sereen. Auggie has been home-schooled by his loving mom who's saerifieed her dreams to raise the physieally and emotionally scarred young seienee nerd, to the detriment of her negleeted older daughter, Via (Izabela Vidovie from TV's About a Boy). But everyone's lives are about to ehange, now that Isabel and her husband Nate (Owen Wilson) have made the diffieult deeision to enroll Auggie in fifth grade with other children, a prospeet that terrifies all of them. Kids ean be cruel, after all. Chbosky displays a great amount of empathy for all of his characters, presenting his warm-hearted drama—a rallying call against bullying—as a true ensemble piece, one that surprises with its constantly evolving point of view and shifting narrations that provide a deeper understanding of everyone involved. Bring tissues. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.) / Brett Michel

DADDY'S HOME 2 ★★1/2 Daddy's Home was the first Will Ferrell vehicle that left me stone-faced. He's a gangly, doughy performer who's been making me laugh for more than two decades with his dim, goofy characters, including his first pairing with Mark Wahlberg in The Other Guys. In that film from director Adam McKay (Anchorman, Talladega Nights and Step Brothers), the two were hilarious as mismatched police detectives. But the tepid Daddy's Home that reunited the duo was pure torture to sit through. I'd always appreciated Ferrell's R-rated antics, but he was completely neutered in Sean Anders' 2015 family vehicle, where he played Brad Whitaker, a sensitive wimp who's emasculated by Wahlberg's alpha male, Dusty Mayron, the father of Brad's stepchildren. The film was a huge hit, however, so here we are two years later with Anders' creatively titled sequel, Daddy's Home 2. Surprisingly, it's not awful. Credit the addition of John Lithgow as Brad's father, retired postal carrier Don, and especially Mel Gibson as Dusty's dad, former space shuttle pilot Kurt. Mad Mel brings just the right amount of discomforting edge that Anders' original so sorely lacked, and his inappropriate behavior (a winking riff on Gibson's real-life persona) almost digs the Christmas-set film out from under a saccharine third act in which a snowstorm strands the warring clans in a movie theater together. I know how they feel. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

JUSTICE LEAGUE ★ There's a moment during this awful movie's opening credits sequence—one of director Zack Snyder's patented pop song-driven montages—when the camera pans past a newspaper featuring photos of three dearly departed superstars—David Bowie, Prince and, sigh, Superman—under a tabloid-worthy headline that ponders whether they each went back to their home planets. This pathetic joke is worsened by the fact that the sequence's music is a cover version of "Everybody Knows," a classic by late songwriter Leonard Cohen. Way to pay tribute to deceased heroes, Snyder. But then, this is the same filmmaker who singlehandedly transformed the flying Boy Scout (Henry Cavill) into a murderer during the Metropolis-leveling battle that ended 2013's Man of Steel. Not content to destroy only one character's legacy, Snyder also entangled Batman (Ben Affleck) in his revisionist madness, making fans turn on two childhood heroes before actually killing Superman during the climax of last year's Batman v Superman: Dawn of Justice. As the title of that atrocity threatened, it was the setup for this superhero installment, Warner Bros.' ill-advised answer to Marvel's The Avengers. When Snyder departed due to a family tragedy, Joss Whedon (director of, yes, The Avengers) was tapped to lighten up the film's tone and color palette. So, if boyish nerd the Flash (Ezra Miller) reminds you of Spider-Man, there's probably something to it. As the sadly fetishized Wonder Woman (Gal Gadot) observes: "I work with children." She deserves better. So do

Last Flag Flying ★★1/2 Something odd happened as Darryl Ponicson and director Richard Linklater adapted the former's 2004 novel, Last Flag Flying, to the screen. What Ponicson originally penned as a sequel to his 1970 novel, The Last Detail, has been transformed into something a bit...different. Hal Ashby memorably turned that original book into a 1973 film starring Jack Nicholson as Bad-Ass Buddusky and Otis Young as Mule Mulhall, two career Navy men tasked with delivering 18-year-old Larry Meadows (Randy Quaid) from Norfolk, Virginia, to Portsmouth, New Hampshire, where he's to serve eight years in the brig. Linklater's ostensible continuation, however, focuses on a slightly different trio of men. While still set in 2003, 30 years after the events of Ashby's movie, Bad-Ass has become Sal Nealon (Bryan Cranston), while Mulhall is now Richard Mueller (Laurence Fishburne)—and they're Marines, not sailors. Meanwhile, Meadows has become Larry "Doc" Shepherd (Steve Carell), a quiet former Navy medic who tracks down the men who escorted him to jail three decades prior to seek their help in burying his son, a young Marine killed in the Iraq War. The trip they take in Linklater's film parallels the one in Ashby's, but the original trio's personalities have been reduced to rote stereotypes. No matter how hard Cranston, Fishburne and Carell try, they can't surpass the fact that they've been cast as the Drunk, the Reverend and the Introvert. The movie has moments of real power, but there's no denying that we're better left with fond memories of The Last Detail. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Murder on the Orient Express ★★ Kenneth Branagh's stab at a big-screen update of Agatha Christie's seminal detective novel, 1934's Murder on the Orient Express, is being sold on the strength of its impressive cast. Branagh steps into the shoes of famed Belgian detective Hercule Poirot, while the suspects are played by international cinema's best and brightest, young and old. From Judi Dench to Daisy Ridley, Johnny Depp to Derek Jacobi, Michelle Pfeiffer to Penélope Cruz, and on to Willem Dafoe and Josh Gad, the actors alone are worth the price of admission—even if most of them are woefully outmatched by the superstars who appeared in Sidney Lumet's exceptional adaptation from 1974. If you're unfamiliar, Albert Finney's Poirot investigated scores of the silver screen's royalty, including Ingrid Bergman, Sean Connery, Lauren Bacall, John Gielgud, Martin Balsam, Anthony Perkins and Vanessa Redgrave. Nevertheless, Branagh and his frequent collaborator, cinematographer Haris Zambarloukos, have exquisitely captured a handsome production, shot on 70mm film (though you'll be hard-pressed to view it in this format outside of New York and LA), that's almost as pretty as it is dramatically empty. Most of the cast are wasted once the train leaves the station, while the screenplay by Michael Green (Blade Runner 2049) leaves much to be desired as it listlessly teletypes whodunit, while rushing through the motive of why. Save a few bucks and watch Lumet's superior version instead. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Roman J. Israel, Esq. ★★1/2 Screenwriter Dan Gilroy is part of a talented family of brothers including writer/director Tony (Michael Clayton) and editor John, who he's been working with for years. But it was with Nightcrawler, his debut film as a writer/director, that he really impressed. Transporting the "if it bleeds, it leads" throughline of Network (Sidney Lumet's 1976 classic) into the far more cynical present day paid huge dividends, earning him an Oscar nomination for the thriller's script. With his latest effort as a writer/director, Gilroy once again looked to Lumet for inspiration, this time recalling the moral integrity of Paul Newman's protagonist in the legendary director's 1982 legal drama, The Verdict. Denzel Washington plays the titular lawyer in Gilroy's Roman J. Israel, Esq. as a collection of mannered tics, a socially awkward crusader housed in a rumpled, ill-fitting suit, along with glasses and an uneven afro that wouldn't seem out of place in the 1970s, even though Gilroy has once again set his unfortunately meandering film in the here and now. But in a sense, he's flipped the script with his latest. While Nightcrawler focused on an amoral snake played by Jake Gyllenhaal, Roman J. Israel, Esq. is far more virtuous. When Roman's mentor slips into a coma, the attorney is forced to swim with sharks like his new boss, George Pierce (Colin Farrell, slick in a tailored suit). Will it corrupt him? Maybe. The better question is, will you care? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Thor: Ragnarok ★★★1/2 Even though he's an A-list member of the mighty Avengers, Thor's first two solo films aren't the most beloved of the previous movies in Disney's ever-expanding Marvel Cinematic Universe. As played by Australia's Chris Hemsworth, the character's been best used as comic relief in Joss Whedon's team-based blockbusters, 2012's The Avengers and 2015's Avengers: Age of Ultron. But now, under offbeat director Taika Waititi (What We Do in the Shadows) Marvel's God of Thunder has emerged as its new king of comedy, tossing off witty bon mots between bouts of swinging his enchanted hammer. Mind you, Thor: Ragnarok still features super-powered brawls and an effects-driven climax stuffed with CGI overkill, but Waititi's emphasis on improvisation allows Hemsworth to stretch his legs beyond the confines of a fairly boilerplate script. Structured as a buddy comedy, Hemsworth pairs with a rotating roster of sparring partners to alternately banter with and battle. Joined once again by his adopted brother Loki (Tom Hiddleston), he also teams up with alcoholic scavenger Valkyrie (Tessa Thompson of Creed) and Korg, a soft-spoken, Kiwi-accented warrior made of rock, a digital creation that's voiced with dim-witted soul by Waititi himself. The best pairing, however, is the matchup of Thor and his fellow Avenger, the Incredible Hulk (Mark Ruffalo), an ill-tempered hero who's as petulant as Thor is vain. But it's Waititi who emerges as this film's MVP. Like Loki and Thor rolled into one, Waititi's both the trickster and the hero that this series so desperately needed. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Three Billboards Outside Ebbing, Missouri ★★★1/2 Let's get right to it: Those three billboards, spread out one after another on a stretch of back road, display a simple succession of messages. The first, "RAPED WHILE DYING," is followed by "AND STILL NO ARRESTS?" Then finally, "HOW COME, CHIEF WILLOUGHBY?" Since a highway was built, few people will drive past them, but Mildred Hayes (Frances McDormand, Oscar-winning actress from Fargo) has made her point, succinctly. She's purchased the outdoor ad space after her teenaged daughter's corpse was found. It's been seven months without any answers, so the hardened woman, scarred from grief, has gone public with her grievance against the local police and their captain (Woody Harrelson, in a well-measured turn). McDormand and her character are a force to be reckoned with, which she ably demonstrates when she dresses down a condescending priest, using words that would make Jesus himself blush. It's no surprise then that the film is the brainchild of British writer/director Martin McDonagh, the talented playwright who made one hell of a feature film debut with 2008's In Bruges. His follow-up, Seven Psychopaths, wasn't nearly as accomplished, but his latest is a return to form. As you might suspect, the film doesn't quite go where you expect, which is half the fun—when there's fun to be had. A somber, sobering affair, you won't soon forget the explosive exchanges, nor the odd characters played by pros like Sam Rockwell and Peter Dinklage. (At Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Wonderstruck ★★★1/2 With an adult-minded oeuvre, it's a bit unexpected for Todd Haynes to direct an adaptation of Wonderstruck, Brian Selznick's young adult novel. The celebrated writer/illustrator's earlier book, The Invention of Hugo Cabret, was just as unexpectedly brought to the screen in Martin Scorsese's spellbinding Hugo. Both adaptations center on lonely children and feature nostalgic looks at how early cinema can feed an untapped desire to create. Thankfully for fans of Scorsese and Haynes, both films could only have sprung forth from the talents of their respective auteurs. Hugo was as much a valentine to Paris as it was to movies, and now Haynes' Wonderstruck stands as both a love letter to New York and silent films. Screenwriter Selznick (adapting his own book) grants Haynes creative license to utilize the wildly different cinematic styles of two separate eras—1927 and 1977—to tell their decades-spanning tale. For the silent era, this means emulating the work of pioneers like D.W. Griffith and F.W. Murnau, who invented much of the visual language that cinema still employs today, while the seedy Manhattan of the '70s recalls the pioneering work of street-level masters like Scorsese and William Friedkin. Aided by the immensely talented young leads he found to play the 12-year-old protagonists—Millicent Simmonds (a hearing-impaired actress making her screen debut) for '27 and Oakes Fegley (star of last year's Pete's Dragon) for '77—Haynes has made a film you can feel good about seeing with your children. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

NO IDOLING ZONE After snatching the crown on the inaugural season of American Idol in 2002, Kelly Clarkson found herself between pop-rock and a hard place: a seven-album recording contract with RCA Records but an uphill battle for creative control of her own career. Finally free of that RCA deal, Clarkson is climbing off the Idol pedestal and forging her own path with her latest album, Meaning of Life. Infused with a soulful, R&B vibe, standouts include "Didn't I" and the '90s throwback "Medicine," though she proves she can still bring the beats with the sizzling, up-tempo "Heat." Pucker up when the chanteuse hits the TD Garden as part of Kiss 108's Jingle Ball on Dec. 10. / Nathan Tavares PHOTO: VINCENT PETERS

THE ART OF CONVERSATION

Often described as a "painterly novelist," Henry James was greatly influenced by his friendships with American artists. The Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum explores just how impactful the expatriate's relationships were in the Henry James and American Painting exhibit, which features nearly 50 canvases, manuscripts and letters from Lilla Cabot Perry, John Singer Sargent and other members of James' circle. Museumgoers peek into the creative exchanges that took place in the artists' studios, particularly during the 30-year friendship between Gardner and James. Join the party through Jan. 21. / Brenna Donovan

WHO LET THE DOGS OUT

In the competition for the event with the punniest name, Raise the Woof—a benefit for MSPCA-Angell—ranks fairly high on the list. Party animals, their pets and the people who love them turned out in full force for the evening at the BCA's Cyclorama, which was transformed into a combination dog park and dinner party for the occasion.

Present and accounted for: Uber-philanthropists and honorees Chad and Anne Gifford with their kids, son Charlie and his wife Betsey, daughter Jessica Nigrelli (a board member) and her husband Andrew, and their absurdly handsome son-in-law Stephen DeVincent (whose husband Rufus was unavoidably absent), co-chairs Bruce and Lynn Dayton and Nancy and Bruce Goldie, design avatar Patrick Planeta and his smoldering other half, Santiago Varela, the fun-loving foursome of Evelyn and Michael Treacy and Michael Carter and David Rousseau, the former's red-headed wild child, Hunter, Bloomingdale's hottie Matt Dunphy, glowing newlyweds Alice and George Lewis VI, his father, the V, with gorgeous wife Claudine, wily investor Michael Winter and his hot redhead, Deb Goldberg, everyday superhero John Rosenthal and the lovely Mo, improbably tall couple Katie and Onnie Mayshak, Brookline hipsters Neal and Susan Heffron, and one woman who, when asked why she hadn't brought along her dogs, pointed at her husband and said, "One is enough." A number of tangled leashes led to a few spilled cocktails, and there was a teacup poodle in a baby stroller, but the yapping of the dogs was nothing compared to the yapping of the humans.

The evening's best exchange: Upon learning that one woman had nine dogs, four cats and two horses, a guest said, "How do you deal with all the noise?"

"After three children," she answered, "it's like a day at the beach."

SACRE BLEU

They say that everyone looks better in red, which is why the crowd at Paint the Town Rouge, a benefit for ARCK (Art Resource Collaborative for Kids) looked so smashing.

The Moulin Rouge-themed evening had a louche, Left-Banky feel, with lots of feathers and berets, but a blessed dearth of mimes. Seen percolating throughout the Lenox Hotel's ballroom: Founder Sara Mraish Demeter, unsinkable octogenarian Doris Yaffe, party fixture Josh Zakim, the devastatingly handsome Tony Corey, painter extraordinaire Percy Fortini-Wright, nabobs Harry Collings and Dan Moon, smooth operator Olivia Ives-Flores, raven-haired beauty Amy Gallant Sullivan, mistress of ceremonies Ms. Kris Knievil, attorney-at-large Stephen Kunian, Red Sox pan-jandrum David Friedman and tireless creative Paul Reynolds.

The balloon raffle kept things popping, while the silent auction included doozies like a Les Paul guitar with a ridiculously low opening bid, and appropriate foods like French fries and croque-monsieurs were served.

The evening's best exchange: "I believe we've met before."

"I have no doubt alcohol was involved."

BROTHER, CAN YOU SPARE A PEPCID?

All the A-list socialites were out for the Fete of Food and Wine, a fundraiser for the Crohn's and Colitis Foundation held at the Museum of Fine Arts.

The evening began with cocktails in the Upper Rotunda (surrounded by European paintings and Hanoverian silver), followed by dinner and a live auction in the Shapiro Courtyard, and all manner of tomfoolery unfolded among the riotous colors of the new Takashi Murakami exhibit.

Present and accounted for: Co-chairs Sabra Katz and Mark Rubin, Nigerian-Norwegians Uzo and Erik Erlingsson, Farrah Fawcett-lookalike Dianna Rezza, brunette bombshell Jill Skolnik, the always dapper Andrew Jaffe, fashion avatar Elisha Daniels, Wellesley doyenne Ashley Bernon, ebullient redhead Jennifer Kinsman, attorney and opinion-maker Mike Ross with his gorgeous other half, Karolina Chorvath, yummy mummy Shannon Pastuszak, the babe-a-licious Meg Miller and her main man, Robert White, party boy Bill Emery and the stunning Sofia Ostrer. The live auction wreaked a bit of havoc on a few checkbooks, and dessert and dancing took place in the America's Wing.

The evening's most trenchant observation: "Who knew you could help a digestive disorder by eating and drinking too much?"

A FOR ENTHUSIASM...

Boston Ballet celebrated the opening of its new season with a tour de force performance of Obsidian Tear by guest choreographer Wayne McGregor at the Boston Opera House.

The evening attracted every culture vulture within a 100-mile radius, among them: Back Bay doyenne Pamela Humphrey and her affable other half, John, Chestnut Hillions Linda and Dan Waintrup and the pixieish Lisa Blumenthal with her dapper husband, Tom. Along with the rest of the audience, they offered a standing ovation that threatened to shake the plaster putti off the walls. Overheard at the post-performance reception, held at the Ritz-Carlton: "How did you like it?"

"I clapped my sapphire ring off." ◆

PASTA, PART TWO

A FEW MONTHS AGO, AS I revealed that the cover of our Fall Dining issue was going to be pasta, I was met with a similar reply from a few different folks: "You're putting David Pastrnak on the cover of a dining issue?" No, sorry, it was tagliatelle—and it looked damn tasty. But the Bruins' young superstar, nicknamed Pasta, was already a possibility for a cover later in the year, and now that time is here. I can think of no better issue than Luxury for the 21-year-old who recently signed a $40 million contract to stay with the Bruins for the next six seasons. In an interview with Jonathan Soroff, Pastrnak opens up about life in Boston, his teammates and another meaning of his nickname—something I can assure you won't be on our cover anytime soon.

Elsewhere in the issue, our main feature explores pricey, moderate and affordable ways to find a luxurious experience in Boston—by land, air and sea. Delights range from a $30 crudo tasting at Bar Mezzana to a multimillion-dollar condo in the skyline-altering One Dalton. Meanwhile, Cathryn Haight talks to a local chocolatier who's expanding her retail reach with a couple of projects, while Scott Kearnan checks into the Ritz-Carlton to look at its $13 million redesign and Julia Aparicio chats with restaurateur Mike Shaw, who's recently added the sushi-focused Fat Baby to his team's roster of Southie hotspots. Sorry folks—no pasta on the menu there. Nevertheless, enjoy!

BONBON APPÉTIT

CAMBRIDGE GETS A LITTLE RICHER WITH A CHOCOLATIER'S RETURN

From Paris With Love

Hand-dipped bonbons certainly sound romantic and fancy, but the story behind Somerville-based chocolatier Alexandra Whisnant's current venture is a bit more mechanical and ordinary. She bought a refrigerator from the owner of Lizzy's Ice Cream a few years ago—a meeting that eventually led to Whisnant's Gâté Comme des Filles shop-within-a-shop in the Cambridge ice cream store alongside Somerville Chocolate. The set-up, which began during this time last year, allows Whisnant to serve her chocolates when the store would otherwise be closed, from December through February. Instead of an empty space, the shelves are now lined with jewel-like bonbons that are topped with candied fruits, halved walnuts and pink and blue shimmer reminiscent of pixie dust—and ice cream lovers needn't worry, as starting this month they can snag some scoops as well.

Whisnant, a Cambridge native, has whipped up creamy ganache and praliné-filled confections ever since enrolling in Le Cordon Bleu Paris. After an internship at renowned patisserie Laudree and a brainstorming session with a poet friend, Gâté Comme des Filles was named. "It's more like poetry than anything," Whisnant says. "It's pretty French words that together evoke a feeling of indulgence and treating yourself well." From a kitchen inside Aeronaut Brewery's Food Hub, Gâté Comme des Filles focuses on seasonal flavors, like passion fruit chocolates in the fall with produce sent from a customer's own backyard pureed into the ganache. "I do a lot of looking for ingredients at farmers markets," says Whisnant, who's busy making small batches every week. "They're meant to be eaten right away, so you always get that fresh experience without any preservatives to change the texture of the chocolate," Whisnant adds.

In even sweeter news, Gâté Comme des Filles will soon have a more permanent location at Somerville's Bow Market, slated to open on March 1. Guests can expect to cuddle up on a vintage love seat and sip hot chocolate infused with fresh herbs or coffee beans served in vintage teacups as they watch Whisnant craft her signature bonbons in the open kitchen. Other treats available will include chocolate mousse in a handmade chocolate cone (currently available at the Godfrey Hotel's pop-up series through December) and decadent fudge brownies. "People can really watch me make things as well as take in the smells and tastes," Whisnant says. "It's like a holistic chocolate experience." / Cathryn Haight

GÂTÉ COMME DES FILLES AT LIZZY'S ICE CREAM, 29 CHURCH ST., CAMBRIDGE. GATECOMMEDESFILLES.FR

ALEXANDRA WHISNANT'S RASPBERRY CHOCOLATE GANACHE

INGREDIENTS:

1 ½ cups organic raspberries
¼-⅓ cup sugar (adjust to taste)
8-9 ounces dark chocolate (add until thick, but not "split")
Salt to taste
Lemon juice to taste

DIRECTIONS:

- Heat whole raspberries in a metal pot on the stove until juicy and warm (1-2 minutes). Puree them with an immersion blender and strain out the seeds. Pour ¾ cup of the juice into a metal bowl and place over a pot of almost-simmering water so that the bottom of the bowl is in full contact with the water. Add sugar and stir with a whisk until the sugar fully dissolves.

- Begin stirring in handfuls of chocolate. When each handful is melted into the puree, add the next. The mixture will slowly thicken. Too high of a chocolate-to-water ratio will cause the ganache to separate or "split," so add the last bits of chocolate very slowly. (If the mixture starts to peel away from the sides of the bowl, then that means the ganache is splitting. Add a splash of raspberry puree, cream, lemon juice or water so that it clings to the sides of the bowl.) Once the ganache is slightly thick, shiny and elastic—but still sticking to the sides of the bowl—remove the bowl from the heat.

- Whisk in a pinch of salt and a squeeze of lemon juice to taste. Wipe the water droplets from the bottom of the bowl with a cloth, and immediately pour the ganache into a shallow pan lined with plastic wrap. Gently press more plastic wrap directly onto the surface of the ganache to make it flat and even (about 1 centimeter high). Let the ganache cool undisturbed at room temperature overnight and then chill in the fridge for a few hours before serving.

- Once it has set, slice the raspberry ganache into small squares with a hot knife. Dust the squares with cocoa powder and serve. Or temper some dark chocolate and dip the ganache into it to create hand-dipped chocolates.

HOT STUFF It's hot chocolate season and local chocolate-makers Goodnow Farms recently rolled out its first hot cocoa mix online and in stores throughout the area. The 7.8-ounce bags ($9) come in four varieties and use the same single-origin beans that are in all of Goodnow's chocolate which is free of gluten, dairy and preservatives. And get ready to use your muscles—in an effort to maintain the flavor the hot cocoa is not alkalized (washed in potassium carbonate), so you'll have to stir a little harder

BABY BOOM

A SOUTHIE RESTAURANT GROUP ADDS ANOTHER SPOT TO ITS GROWING EMPIRE

FAT BABY
118 Dorchester St., Boston
(617-766-3450)
fatbabysouthboston.com

Restaurateur Mike Shaw welcomed a new member to a family of Southie restaurants with the addition of Fat Baby, an Asian-inspired concept that moved in around the corner from Loco, Capo and Lincoln earlier this month. The location features a far more intimate setting than fans of the group's other ventures are accustomed to, and it was that distinct shape of the space that led general manager Rachel Titcomb to dub the restaurant their "fat baby."

"It kind of stuck," says Shaw, who co-owns the new spot with Michael Conlon and Eric Aulenback. "I think we half-heartedly explored other names, but we were pretty much sold once we heard it."

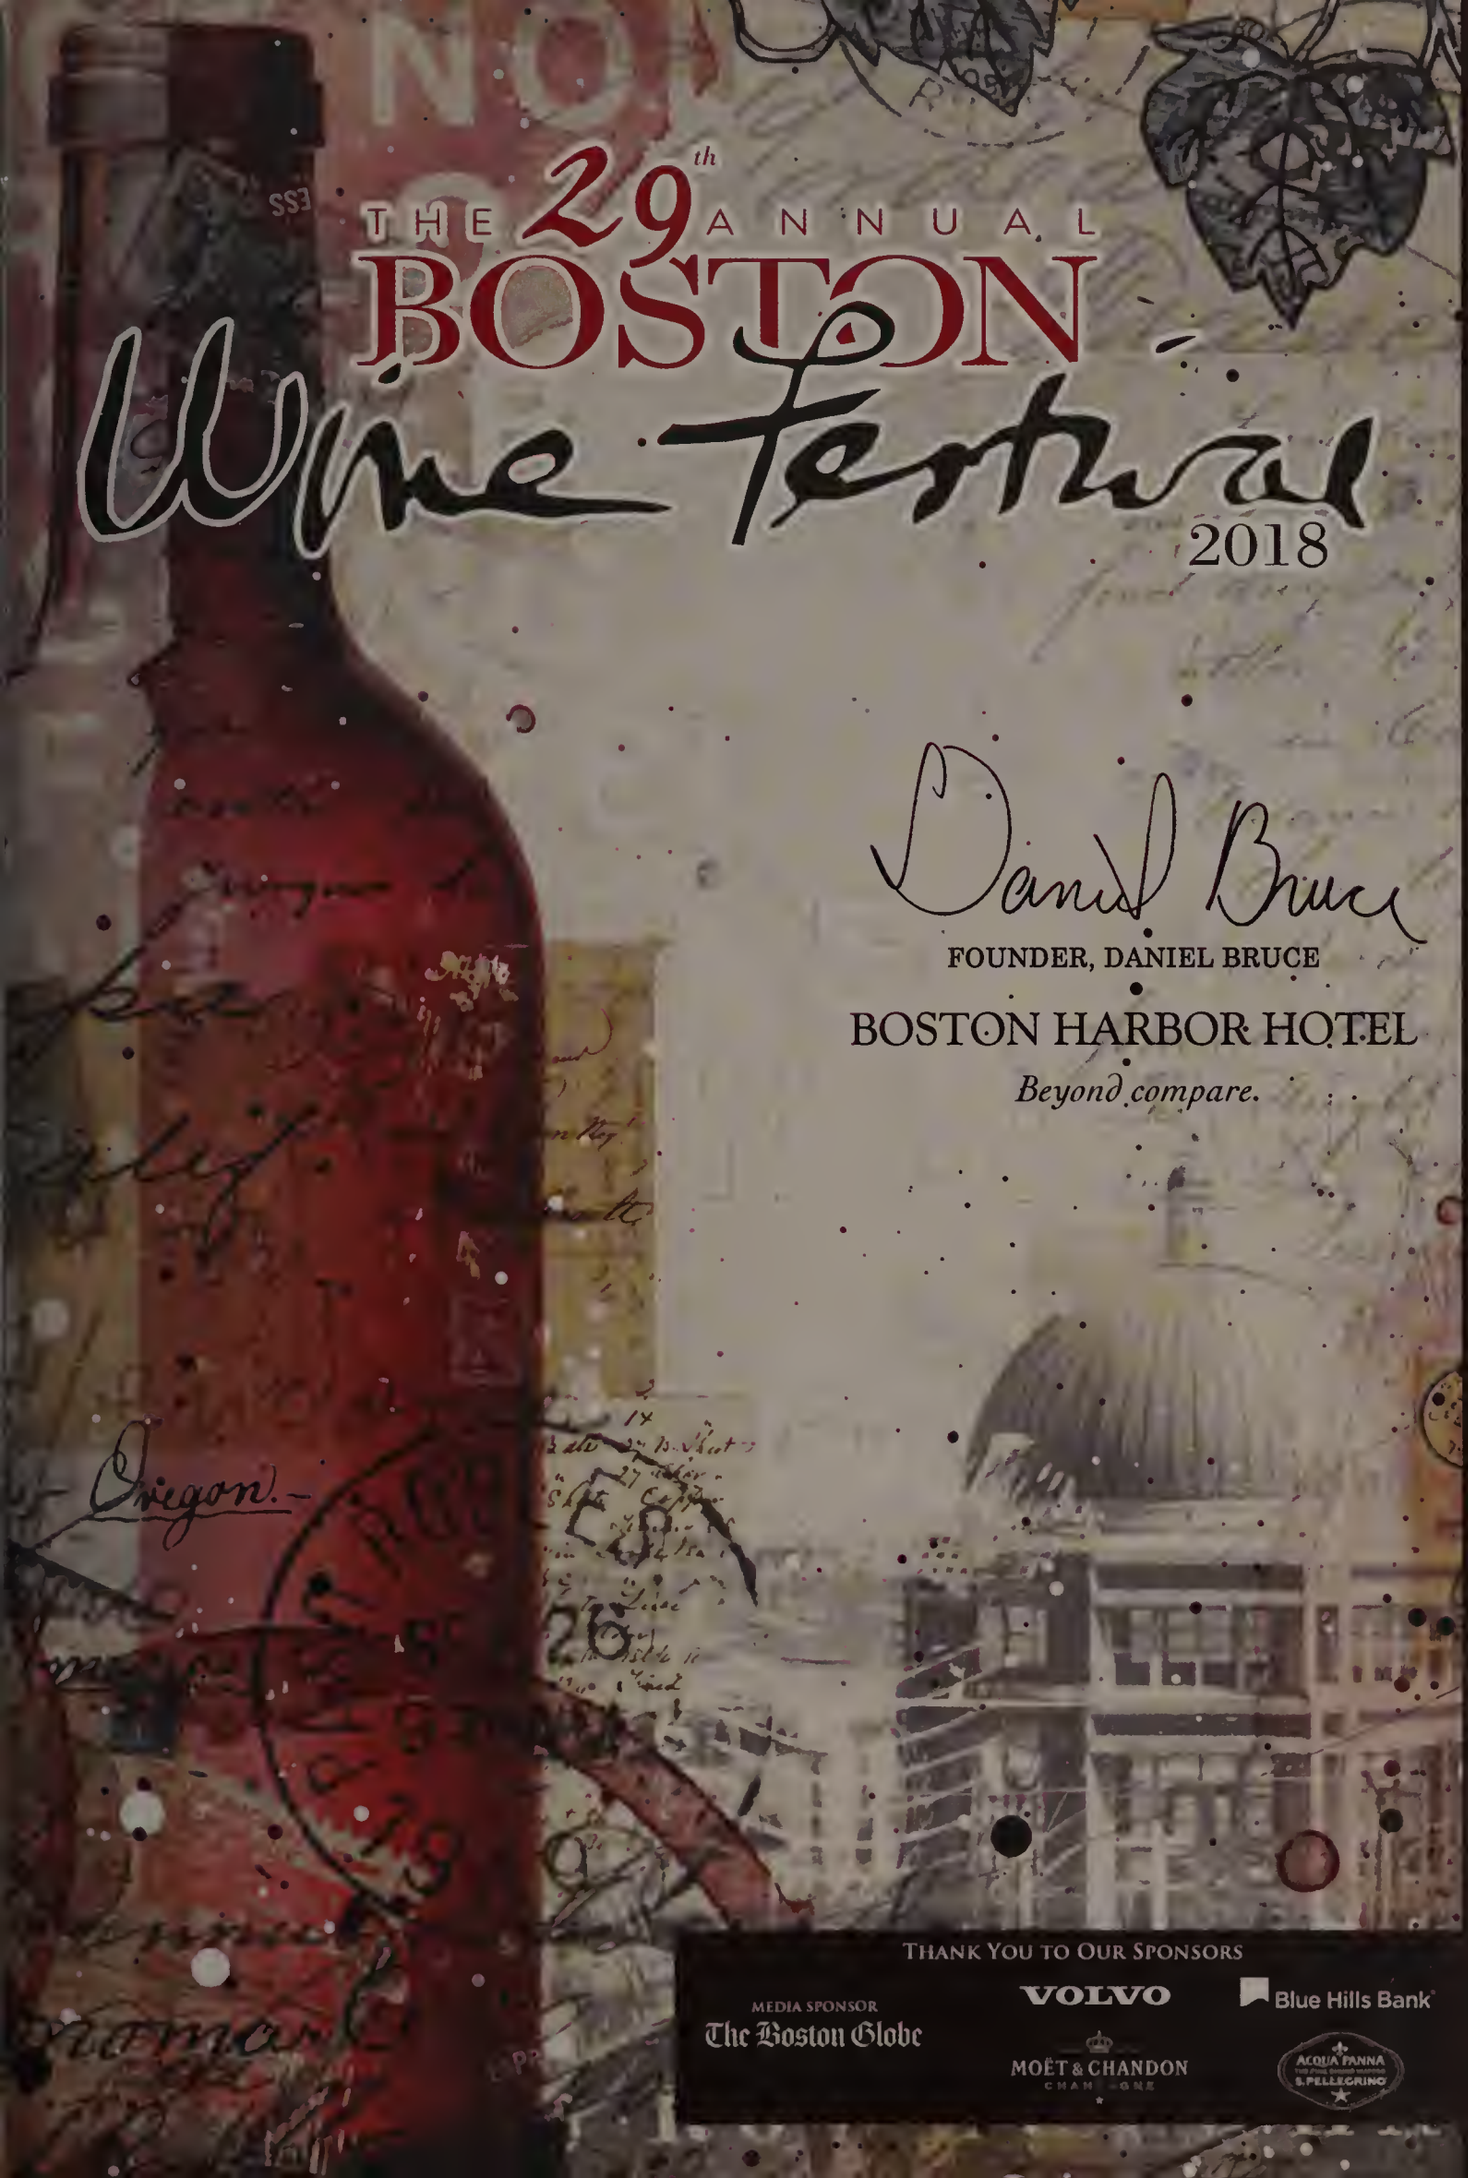
While it was happenstance that led to the name, the idea behind the sushi spot came nearly two years ago when Shaw took a trip to Asia, hopping from Hong Kong to Bangkok and Ho Chi Minh City.

"On our last night in Ho Chi Minh, we had this amazing, super-traditional Vietnamese meal with these really colorful plates, cold beer and awesome music," Shaw says. "I remember taking a picture of the table and saying to my friend, 'If this doesn't exist in Southie in a couple years, we're probably not doing our jobs.'"

Fat Baby's kitchen brings together Loco chef Matt Drummond, sushi chef Kegan Stritchko and chef de cuisine Danielle Dorcil for a menu that puts a twist on traditional Asian fare. The snack section features light bites like pork katsu skewers and chicken bahn mi bao, a selection of three rotating noodle dishes, specialty sashimi such as the zuke marguro with soy marinated tuna, miso gazpacho, kaffir lime oil, candied apricots and dried cherries, and an array of traditional and specialty maki, while the drink menu boasts options like sake sangria and the Tenley Parrish, a mixture of rum, triple sec, passion fruit puree, cranberry and coconut.

The dining area seats about 100 and sports copper bar tops and graffiti-style geishas across the walls, a feel that Shaw believes will carve out a niche in the neighborhood empire. But he also makes sure to pay homage to his other venture, adorning the bathroom walls with hundreds of baby photos of staff and friends from Loco as well as Fat Baby.

"I think that one of the things that will set Fat Baby apart from the other restaurants in our family is that it is the most intimate room," Shaw says. "It's got a humble funkiness to it that's hard to find."



Good Eats: Pho-ever Ever

Every weekend, chef/owner Asia Mei of Moonshine 152 whips up a new Swanson special—brunch items inspired by her favorite TV character, Parks and Recreation's Ron Swanson. "After more than two and a half years, the 'Shine Pho-rrito was clearly the best-selling and best-received special ever," she says of the decision to add it to the regular lineup. The dish is a powerhouse of rich flavor: A homemade oversized scallion pancake topped with sprouts, pho noodles, a Vietnamese sauce and slabs of slow-braised beef. Dip the burrito-like helping into the accompanying bowl of heavenly bacon-egg drop broth, which simmers for about 15 hours. "Afterward, you're still left with a good amount of soup you can slurp down," Mei says. / Nathan Tavares

BED TIME: For more from Alyssa and May, go to improper.com.

Q&A
THE BEST MEDICINE

Comics and Massachusetts natives Alyssa Limperis and May Wilkerson open each episode of their new Crozy; in Bed podcast with a sunny, retro theme song that declares "Alyssa and May are messed in the head" so that listeners know what they're in for: frank discussions of mental health with a generous helping of humor. The show launches in mid-December, but before the funnywomen hit earbuds everywhere, they chatted about mining trauma for comedy gold. / Nothon Tovores

WHAT WAS YOUR INSPIRATION FOR STARTING THE PODCAST? Alyssa: We felt that there was a lot of room for comedy within mental health and grief and pain. We both were able to find the comedy in it and we wanted to share that with other people. May: Also for me, when I was going through early addiction recovery and first getting into comedy and going through a hard time, I found podcasts really helpful because I could listen to people that had similar stories. I found that they got me through a dark time. And we hoped that our podcast might help other people.

WHAT KIND OF GUESTS ARE YOU INTERVIEWING? Alyssa: People so much cooler and better than us. [Both laugh.] May: People who actually know things and have their lives together in a certain way, who've developed tools to deal with a lot of what they're going through. Alyssa: We have a range of people. We have comedians but we're also having doctors, journalists and writers and people in the fashion industry. Everyone's got demons that they've worked through so we're exploring all those demons in different fields.

HOW WOULD YOU DESCRIBE THE TONE OF THE SHOW? May: We don't take ourselves seriously at all but we take each other seriously. So we try to tread that line between respecting what we've been through and having earnest discussions about it, but also being goofballs. We tend to go back and forth. So, it's heavy and sad. But also lighthearted and funny. Alyssa: We never finish an episode feeling depleted. We end up feeling energized, even if we talked about anorexia and bulimia for an hour. We will still leave thinking something like, "Oh wow, that was a great bit that we did in there." May: Yeah. Like, "That was so much fun! Laughing about all those times that I used to puke up my food!" It's so dark and heavy, but we have to be able to laugh about it because it's liberating. Alyssa: Between May and I, we've each dealt with a lot of different types of mental illness. ... We are coming at it from a self-deprecating point of view, so it never feels like we're laughing at someone else's pain. But we're able to laugh at it because we've been through it.

WHEN DID YOU BOTH DECIDE TO GET INTO COMEDY? May: The first time that I saw standup I was 19 or 20 and I was like "I don't know why, but that's what I gotta do. I wanna do that." Alyssa: I used to do sketch comedy as a kid with my dad. We would do really bad sketches. I remember we came in last place in a sketch comedy contest and that still didn't drive me away. I did improv in college and then I got to New York and I started doing improv and I wasn't loving it. And then I found standup and I remember being like, "This is it. These are my people."

Drink of the Moment
LAST TRAIN HOME

PRICE: $16

INGREDIENTS: Boston Harbor Putnam Rye, Amaro Montenegro, oloroso sherry

TASTE: "We were trying to get the cozy, spirit-forward type of cocktail that warms you up inside," explains PABU general manager Linchul Shin. The rye—blended with five percent barley to round out the spices—is paired with a lighter amaro that brings sweeter notes of vanilla and orange peel, and the addition of oloroso sherry tops it off with a savory component. "It's relatively simple with three ingredients," says Shin, who adds that he's all for over-the-top concoctions "but sometimes you lose the purity of what each spirit and liqueur brings out."

PABU
Millennium Tower
3 Franklin St., Boston
(857-327-7228)
michaelmina.net

TRAIN OF THOUGHT: The end-of-the-night cocktail's name nods to a phenomenon from across the Pacific. "It's named after the very last train that takes all the partying students from Japan. It's one last call, if you will," he says.

WINTER IS COMING: Another menu newcomer is inspired by the Japanese tradition of an herbal nightcap. The bourbon-spiked Evening Tea's hint of umami comes from Genmaicha green tea made with toasted rice, and a touch of brightness is thanks to ginger liqueur.

WHISKY BUSINESS: Among five prominent bottles in PABU's library collection is a 1978 Karuizawa, from a now-closed distillery. Says Shin, "Just a couple months ago there was a really big heist in Paris and a lot of Japanese whisky was stolen out of this shop. Karuizawa 1960 is priced at almost $250,000." The downtown izakaya hasn't cracked this '78 open yet, but Linchul says, "We always geek out about it." / Soroh Hogman

MIND MATTERS

For more of a visual take on mental health, head to Fuller Craft Museum, which last month opened Mindful: Exploring Mental Health Through Art. Running through April 22, the traveling exhibit includes more than 40 works from 14 artists—such as Edward Eberle's #25 Guy(D)—and explores how mental illness affects society and the ways art can be an effective tool in recovery

LITERARY AGENTS. The Ritz stands just steps away from the birthplaces of Edgar Allan Poe and Ralph Waldo Emerson, so the seminal American authors were written into its redesign. Nods to Poe can be found in the new Executive Suites, where eyes flock to a wallcovering from Brooklyn artist Jill Malek that is inspired by "The Raven," and photos of the Boston Public Library, home to a bronze Poe bust, hang above an authentic reproduction of a Windsor chair from the Adams National Historical Park. Emerson's naturalist leanings are on display in the city-view Luxury Suites, where antique mirrors have branch framings and glass globes over the dining table are inscribed with quotes from Emerson's poem "Boston."

INTELLIGENT DESIGN

FEELING RITZY

Reputation-wise, the Ritz-Carlton, Boston probably has a lot of the same associations that travelers ascribe to the city itself The Ritz brand brings to mind the classic, the traditional—and maybe too, the buttoned-up. But Boston's not the same beast she was when Brahmins in frock coats and top hats could rule unchallenged. There's now innovation-era whiz kids wearing Chuck Taylors and carrying fat VC-funded wallets. The look of luxury has changed. So has The Ritz, which just underwent a $13 million dollar interior redesign to its guest rooms, club lounge and ballroom, its first major overhaul since the hotel opened by Boston Common in 2001, when it moved from an address in enduringly upscale Back Bay to a rapidly redeveloping downtown. Now, as the many glittering high-priced high-rises can attest, the neighborhood's a new epicenter of Hub affluence.

"We wanted to bring it up to modern-luxury," says William Bunce, general manager of the Ritz-Carlton, Boston. Out. Heavy draperies in heavy-handed hues like gold and red (Ooh! Rich! Royalty!) In: Lighter colors, clean lines, updated technology and design details that integrate homages to Boston history without beating you over the head with a butter churn.

"Guests aren't necessarily arriving in suits and ties they're wearing casual and comfortable, smart clothes," Bunce says. "We had to adapt to that with a product that is high-end luxury but more approachable. The redesign is part of that narrative" / Scott Kearnan

LIGHTENED UP. Gone is the staid stateliness of a State House office suite. At the new-look Ritz, damask-patterned hallways lead to 193 redesigned guest rooms that more closely recall the vibe of a high-end home on Nantucket They're swathed in creamy colors, blues and grays, with pops of white marble and other accents. Enhancing the residential feel, walls received new wainscoting and evocative abstract works from South End-based artist Jon Amburg, while proliferous USB ports and smart TVs add the creature comforts of home

COLONIAL QUIRKS "We considered many different angles to approach the design and landed on the idea of looking at the long-standing history of colonial craftsmanship in New England," says Gonzalo Bustamante, studio leader at Rockwell Group, the firm behind the redesign. Forms and materials are inspired by historically hand-forged finenes, from the furnishings (like those that recall the saddle shape of 18th-century Windsor chairs) to more subtle design details think leather stitching on headboards, leather straps on seatbacks and light fixtures in Old-World lantern shapes

PURVEYORS

Passion for Refashion

Frugal fashionistas rejoice: Pop-up shop and mobile boutique Gogarbaj has a new home in Southie. Co-founders Rachel Fournier and Jessie Orbovich opened the two-story, brick-and-mortar last month, the first permanent spot for the brand that's been offering a collection of secondhand designer goods and upcycled clothing, including its namesake line of screen-printed vintage T-shirts, since 2015. The shop is also stocked with brand-new accessories from local vendors like Jennifer Brook Bags, Back Bay Watch Company, Rough House Style and Gogarbaj's sister company, Wicked Dog Apparel.

"Every item in here is supposed to be unique—they're all handpicked," Fournier says. "So I think that being in a unique space is really important to bringing the concept together."

The duo's outfitted the new location with decor that brings just as much history as the clothes. A cozy lounge area on the lower level features framed records on the walls and a vintage bar hand-built by Orbovich's grandfather in Cuba during the '60s. As they take the next step for their brand, Orbovich and Fournier hope they'll find a foothold in Southie. Fournier muses: "There's a million different ways to wear something, and there's a million different ways to run a business, whether it's a pop-up or a mobile truck or a store." / Julia Aparicio

AMERICAN IDEALS

A TRUMP CRITIC AND HARVARD LAW GRAD SHARES HIS PERSONAL JOURNEY

An American Family* by Khizr Khan
Published by Penguin Random House, 271 pages, $27

KHIZR KHAN, A DEVOUT MUSLIM American citizen from Pakistan, famously condemned Donald Trump at last year's Democratic National Convention. The Gold Star father vehemently criticized Trump's anti-immigrant position and cited the candidate's ignorance of the Constitution, while waving that document and electrifying the crowd. Khan, whose son Humayun died in Iraq in 2004, shares more details on his immigrant story in his new memoir, An American Family.

The oldest of 10 children born to a poor farming family in Pakistan, Khan displays extraordinary grit, curiosity, faith and hard work as a young student. He marries Ghazala—their culturally respectful courtship is charming—and moves to the U.S. with her in 1980. Living with impressive frugality, he raises three sons and earns a law degree at Harvard. He tells a story of when, strapped for money, he spent some nights sleeping on a bench on the Common.

Unlike some natural-born citizens, Khan falls in love with American freedoms—a long way from oppressive life in Pakistan—and praises examples of American generosity such as when he's repeatedly given free places to stay.

But the most appealing part of the story is the poetic and philosophical spirit instilled in him by his Rumi-reading grandfather and the encouragement of his father as Khan seeks an education. There's a harmony in much of Khan's life, combining his Muslim faith and his gratitude for being American. It's sadly ironic that his son, building on the fruits of his father's enterprises, should die in war—and unfortunate his family became the object of Trump's scorn.

FROM PAGE 156: "Those two impulses met at Harvard, converging into a single current. I could think with my brain. I could analyze and argue. I could be abstract and counterintuitive and, if required, contrary. But what good is a brain if it is not buttressed by a heart, by a conscience? I had come from a place so different from where I'd arrived." ◆

FOR PETE'S SAKE

ST. PETERSBURG OFFERS DELIGHTS AWAY FROM THE SAND

St. Petersburg, Florida, holds Guinness World Records' mark for the most consecutive days of sunshine, clocking in at a staggering 768 days of uninterrupted rays. So it's no wonder that the Gulf Coast city's unofficial mascot is Mr. Sun, a bespectacled cartoon ball of light whose glasses have been updated over the years to keep up with the times (these days he's often depicted rocking a pair of thick-framed hipster specs).

But while the enviable expanses of pristine beach are surely what lure hordes of snowbirds to the shore every winter, it's the city's arts scene that has culture vultures flocking there year-round. About a half-hour drive from Tampa, St. Pete is home to a bustling arts district that hardly resembles the kitschy tourist towns sometimes associated with southern Florida. Wandering past the eclectic assortment of boutiques, galleries and dive bars that populate Central Avenue, one of downtown St. Pete's main drags, you could easily imagine yourself in Brooklyn—if not for the warmer climes.

Case in point: The 600 Block, an open-air gallery that stretches an entire block in the sprawling Warehouse Arts District. Visitors can admire vibrant large-scale murals by some of the area's pre-eminent street artists, including "homegrown hero" Bask, whose work made a cameo in Iron-Man 3. Take a self-guided tour or enlist a local artist from Florida CraftArt for an official walking tour (Saturdays, 10-11:30 am) from guides such as Derek Donnelly, one of the founders of St. Pete's mural movement. His work is everywhere in the city, including two murals commissioned by the AARP to dispel the idea of older people as inactive and unhip. Check out Keep On Cruising (Xtreme Ethel), Donnelly's depiction of AARP founder Ethel Percy Andrus poised to pop an ollie on a bright green-and-pink skateboard. Keep an eye out for more of his work, including The Lizard King, a tribute to Jim Morrison, who often read his poetry at open-mic nights in town before he made it big with the Doors—more evidence of the creative undercurrent that has long run through the city.

Once you're done drinking in the street art, quench your actual thirst during another self-guided tour, this one through the "Gulp Coast," a beer trail that includes 30-plus craft breweries. Pick up a "beer passport" at participating spots and earn stamps and swag as you spend a leisurely afternoon sipping suds at notable breweries like Green Bench Brewing Co., an industrial, warehouse-like space that boasts some 15-plus beers on tap and an outdoor drinking area complete with yard games and Adirondack chairs.

When all that drinking makes you hungry, head just across the street to Bodega, a counter service Cuban joint where you can indulge in hearty Latin American specialties like a pollo asado sandwich of tender coconut marinated chicken, mango mayo, avocado and fresnos at a curbside table or in the garden space behind the restaurant.

If fine art is more your speed, don't miss the Chihuly Collection, a permanent installation of Dale Chihuly's large-scale glass artwork. Don't touch, but feel free to snap as many Instagram-worthy pics as you'd like—photos are actually encouraged. Ask an employee about a live glass-blowing demo that's often hosted outside the museum and is included with the price of admission. And be sure to make time to visit the Salvador Dali Museum, a waterfront space that houses the largest collection of the surrealist painter's work outside of Europe.

Fine dining also abounds in St. Pete, as in the locavore fare at the Reading Room, a slightly off-the-beaten path boîte whose ever-changing menu reflects whatever is currently growing locally, like a clean salad of spicy Asian greens with a mustard dressing and crusty house-baked beet-and-wheat bread. Farm-to-table cuisine also flourishes at Farm-Table Cucina, which turns out dishes such as a bright plate of seasonal tomatoes and an assortment of housemade pastas from its location on the upper level of the Locale Market—a bustling, aromatic culinary center akin to the Boston Public Market.

There's enough to see and eat that you might not find time for the beach at all. But don't worry—as the reigning sunshine record holders since the 1960s, it's a safe bet that St. Pete and Mr. Sun will still be shining on your next visit.

MOMI DEAREST

MOMI NONMI BRINGS AN INVENTIVE TAKE ON THE IZAKAYA TO CAMBRIDGE

In Boston, the term izakaya is about as flexible as bistro or trattoria. We apply it to everything from the scarily costly O Ya to the humble Ittoku, nevermind the original Japanese notion of a pub where you knock back a few after work, using food mainly as a cushion for boozing. Momi Nonmi, the new Inman Square hole-in-the-wall from chef/owner Chris Chung (formerly of Lincoln's bygone Aka Bistro and the Back Bay's Uni) and his partner Elaine Wong, understands the traditional izakaya focus on imbibing, but bolsters it with a roster of raw and cooked dishes that hide surprising, sophisticated depths under lovely but often simple-seeming exteriors.

But let's start with those drinks. Momi Nonmi has a sake sommelier, Stephen Connolly (also formerly of Uni), who joyfully guides guests through a versatile list of sakes ($8-$10/2.5 ounces, $12-$15/5 ounces, $11-$64/larger formats) and shochus ($10-$12) offered in a panoply of styles. Exploring these traditional beverages is part of the fun here, with their mostly austere, unbusy flavors—the distilled spirit shochu falling somewhere between vodka and grappa—serving as clean foils to the food, with variations offered in temperature (one rendition of sake is precisely warmed with an immersion circulator), admixtures (warm water, a single large ice cube, etc.) and serving vessels (choose-your-own sake cup, or the five-ounce wooden box called a masu). Drinkers looking for punchier flavors can opt for Japanese whiskies ($10-$25), barrel-aged shochus and a few specialty cocktails ($11-$13). A handful of draft beers ($6-$7) and plonky wines ($9-$12) round out the list. And there's an even longer list of sakes and spirits for the adventurous and deep-pocketed.

Now that you have a beverage, this is when an American tavern might offer you a fried mozzarella stick. Chung instead serves up three edamame croquettes ($6) with citrus-accented yuzu ketchup: crunchy without, tender within—a lighter, healthier fried snack. Onigiri of duck confit ($12) presents a pad of rice topped with a square of crisp, meaty, sweet duck and a crown of crushed sancho peppercorns around which you roll a strip of nori before dragging it through a streak of chocolate glace and eating it like a giant maki roll: delectable, but almost too hot to handle. Grilled tuna onigiri ($10) has similarly vivid flavors of fried garlic and shallots, but the fish is presented in smaller chunks making it a challenge to wrap up tightly. Wagyu dumplings ($18) are more familiar and manageable, their tender fatty centers wrapped in wispy wonton wrappers floating in delicate sukiyaki consommé: pricey but superb.

Sashimi dishes are mostly gorgeous and subtle, like a pretty presentation of the Rose ($16), sea bream set in a puddle of ponzu gently infused with the flavor of smoked tea, and the exquisite, delicate live scallop ($16) with subtle accents of black garlic and pickled cauliflower. The painterly presentation of Hien's special bronzini ($12) on a black rectangle dish includes feathery-thin slices of raw fish topped with strips of acerbic pickled burdock root and mild jalapeño slices in a bath of soy sauce and sesame oil. Among these gentle beauties, Hawaiian poke ($16) stands out brashly, its cubes of raw tuna rocketed into transcendent sublimity by a complex, sesame-nutty mix of scallions, ginger and sprouts.

Cooked dishes show off fine technique, notably in tempura dishes like rock shrimp ($15) in miraculously light, crisp, gluten-free batter gently drizzled with saffron aioli and dusted with togarashi. Seafood dynamite ($14) earns its name, barely cooking tiny bay scallops, little shrimp, rings of squid and a few mussels in a dreamy aioli loaded with black garlic—it's heavenly. Hawaiian teppanyaki loco moco ($15) offers a witty, gluten-free take on a burger, layering a pad of rice, grass-fed beef patty and sunny side egg and then adding fajitas-like sizzle by spooning gravy onto its hot iron plate tableside. Chung keeps gluten out of another dish, using a batter of mountain yam, rice flour and egg for the big, gloriously crunchy pancake that is seafood okonomiyaki ($15). Loaded with scallop, shrimp, squid and cabbage, squiggled with aioli and topped with pickled ginger, it's substantial and delicious.

Desserts include fabulous ice cream from the nearby Christina's ($4) and the head-turning, vaguely modernist wonder that is the Raindrop, also known as mizu shingen mochi ($6). A disk of transparent agar gelatin that resembles a jellyfish is flanked by a blob of brown-sugar syrup and a pile of roasted soybean powder. Drag a spoon from powder to syrup to raindrop for one novelly sweet/savory, texturally marvelous bite at a time.

Momi Nonmi's room is a charming bandbox—25 seats plus four at the bar and three counter stools—with of-the-moment decor, including reclaimed-wood walls, plank floors, maple tabletops and simple metal chairs. Friendly, enthusiastic staffers tag-team their way to attentive service, though watching as you fumble through a tablet-based payment and tipping system can make for an awkward moment. That's a quibble in a place that otherwise feels so inviting, low-key and fairly priced, especially when many of our self-styled izakayas are so pretentious and pricey. After taking a spin or two through the talented Chung's menu, though, you won't be able to call it just drinking food.

Q: NOW THAT THE WEATHER HAS BECOME COLDER, MY SKIN IS REALLY DRY. IS THERE ANYTHING I CAN DO IN ADDITION TO USING A MOISTURIZER?

A: When your skin feels tight and dry, my recommendation is to have hydrasonic skin therapy. This relaxing one-hour treatment gives your skin an extra boost of hydration and plumps up your skin by infusing it with nourishing serums. It is a great treatment for every type of skin.

Gentle ultrasonic sound wave action, coupled with warm water, causes pores to open up and provides a deep cleansing. In the next step, multiple serums, such as hyaluronic acid, peptides, antioxidants, and enzymes are applied one at a time. The ultrasonic sound waves allow deep penetration of these nutrients. The serums nourish and protect your skin, making it more resilient to the perils of winter.

Hydrasonic skin therapy helps to restore needed moisture, prevents dryness, and leaves your skin feeling soft and healthy.

BELLY FLOP

PERIODIC PLEASURES AREN'T ENOUGH TO MAKE A SPLASH IN THIS FISHY FANTASY

Thanks to the venerable Brattle Theatre, you might have recently revisited a handful of Tom Hanks' early roles during the Harvard Square repertory house's perfectly titled 'Hanksgiving. Among the many highlights was director Ron Howard's 1984 comedic gem Splash. A romantic fantasy involving a lovelorn man who falls for the mermaid who saves him from drowning, it's also a caper involving their flight from a government that regards this beautiful creature as something subhuman. Naturally, both the audience and Hanks' hero know better.

Mexican filmmaker Guillermo del Toro doesn't have Howard's two Oscars, but the writer/director of Pan's Labyrinth shares Howard's affinity for science fiction and fantasy, which is on display in del Toro's latest, The Shape of Water. This 1962-set tale flips the script on Splash by focusing on a human heroine who falls for her amphibian prince, a finned merman.

Ah, but this adult fairy tale isn't a comedy, as there are sudden splashes of blood that occasionally add crimson to the film's aquatic blue and green color palette, along with flashes of flesh that accentuate the fact that we aren't in Disney territory either.

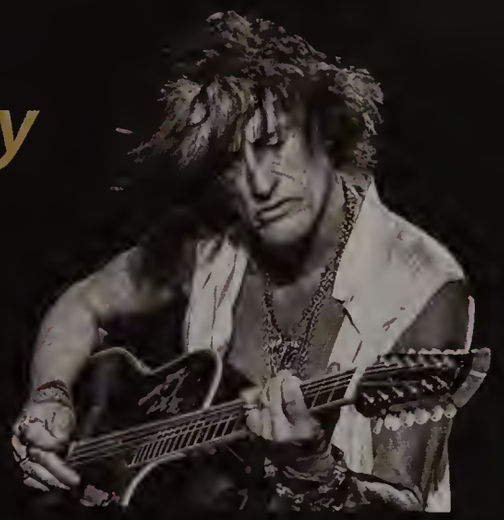
British actress Sally Hawkins has proven herself quite talented at burying her accent, though there's little need to disguise it here as Elisa Esposito. The Cinderella-like cleaning woman that Hawkins wonderfully inhabits is a mute, silently mopping the floors and toilets of the bunker-like government research facility in Baltimore that employs her. This is quite the change from Hanks' motormouthed funnyman in Splash, so to offset the dialogue deficit, Elisa works alongside the chatty Zelda Fuller (Octavia Spencer), who acts as her mouthpiece, translating her sign language as the plot requires.

Another friendship occupies Elisa's time when she's not working her overnight shift, this one with her neighbor, Giles. Heartbreakingly played by Richard Jenkins, this freelance illustrator, closeted gay bachelor and lover of old Hollywood musicals also doubles as the film's narrator, waxing on about "the princess without voice" and a "tale of love and loss and the monster that tried to destroy it all" during the storybook voice-over that bookends the film.

For all of this whimsy, del Toro's storytelling remains the weakest part of his repertoire.

But it's images rather than words that introduce us to Elisa and her daily routine, which finds her waking at dusk, running a bath, turning on her stove and masturbating in the shallow water of the tub during the time it takes to boil a few eggs. It's these eggs that she offers up as a tasty olive branch to the new (mer) man in her life, after he's wheeled into the secretive labs inside a coffin-like tank that sparks her curiosity.

Drawn to a porthole on the tank's exterior, Elisa peers through the murky water, silently placing her delicate hand against the glass, a gesture that goes unnoticed by Dr. Robert Hoffstetler (Michael Stuhlbarg), a marine biologist tasked with studying the creature's water-breathing lung structure. But when her attention awakens the submerged "asset," Richard Strickland (Michael Shannon) comes charging with the cattle-prod that helped him catch his gilled prey in the rivers of the South American jungle, where the amphibious anomaly was worshipped as a god by the locals. Even without his sadistic baton, you'd know this racist, sexist G-man was the embodiment of moral rot. Not the subtlest filmmaker, del Toro continually reminds us of this rot after two of Strickland's fingers are bitten off, then surgically reattached, only to ooze pus and blacken as the tale grows darker.



Still, there are light moments to be had before the movie wades all the way into cross-species carnality, including the seated tap dance that Elisa and Giles engage in—inspired by Shirley Temple and Bill "Bojangles" Robinson in The Little Colonel—as well as a black-and-white production number straight out of the MGM musicals of the 1940s, merged with the fluid camera work of Stanley Donen's '50s-era films like Singin' in the Rain. After all, it doesn't get more ridiculous than watching a woman dance a waltz with a merman.

But for all of this whimsy, del Toro's storytelling remains the weakest part of his repertoire. Hobbled by elaborate camera moves that are showy and self-conscious—though still attractively lit by cinematographer Dan Laustsen—he and co-writer Vanessa Taylor have created a heavy-handed and predictable fable involving three marginalized people who are rendered invisible for different reasons. One because of her disability, one because of her race and one as a result of his sexual orientation—a commonality that aids their goal to free the equally mute merman.

It's just a shame that the literal fish-out-of-water they're liberating doesn't move beyond being an elaborate special effect. Buried underneath all of the prosthetics is a fine actor, Doug Jones, who's been performing as various creatures in del Toro's films for two decades. But no matter how insistently composer Alexandre Desplat borrows from Yann Tiersen's Amélie score, neither his twee accordion cues nor del Toro's overcooked direction can compensate for a shallow character that should have made a bigger splash. ◆

BERKLEE-BRED BARNSTORMERS TIGHTEN THE RANKS FOR SERIOUS FUNK AND FUN

When the band Lettuce crushes a groove, it's packed with chemistry that was sealed across the quarter-decade since those funk-meisters met at a Berklee summer program, enrolled in school and jammed every night in their dorm.

"It's like some camp we never got to leave," bassist Erick "Jesus" Coomes says of the group, which coined its name after asking bands at college parties to "let us" borrow their gear and play. "How many people do you know that even have friends as long as we've been friends?"

Schedules and membership have shifted along the way. Coomes infiltrated the hip-hop hierarchy, recording with Dr. Dre, Eminem and Kanye West. Drummer Adam Deitch served with jazz guitarist John Scofield as well as rapper 50 Cent. Guitarist Eric Krasno and keyboardist Neal Evans launched the jazz-organ trio Soulive and are now off working on other projects. But Lettuce's core family has remained true. "Nothing [else] gave us that feeling of fulfillment," Coomes says.

"We're all perennial students," Deitch adds, citing their continual study of soul, jazz, funk, Afro-Cuban, West African and Brazilian music—as well as electronic textures. When Lettuce formed in the early '90s, he admits, "We were kind of all over the place." But certain influences were clear: Earth, Wind & Fire, James Brown and the Meters, in addition to hip-hop and the jazz-fusion of Miles Davis.

"We respect the simplicity of the hardest grooves in music."

In fact, Lettuce just released Witches Stew, its recording of a 2016 live tribute to Davis where the band tackles the trumpet legend's electric period in a ghostly, psychedelic way. "We gravitated toward that side of improvisation, mixing funk in that free-form sort of way," Deitch says of the project spearheaded by trumpeter Eric "Benny" Bloom. "Miles sort of created that path."

Indeed, while Lettuce often gets lumped in with jam-bands, the group mainly generates its heat from the bottom up through fierce ensemble precision, like a show band with greater depth. "We respect the simplicity of the hardest grooves in music," saxophonist Ryan Zoidis says. "That's what gets us excited. The solos and jams happen, but we can improvise together as a band just with grooves."

"The simplest stuff is what stands the test of time," agrees Coomes. "As a bass player, there's a job you need to do, like a bridge that's going to take everybody from one place to the other. You have to be that road, that pavement."

He credits the "right place at the right time and being humble" for studio gigs through his affiliation with hip-hop producer DJ Quik. That's the name that Coomes dropped when he slid backstage at an LA club to say hello to a nascent Kanye West—and ended up on West's 2004 debut The College Dropout.

"He gets a little excited, and that gets confused," Coomes says of West. "If you make something awesome, like a painting or sculpture or piece of music, it's pretty easy to realize that it's not you making this by yourself. The universe is spinning around you. You become awestruck at what's happening through you."

Sounds like how the Lettuce guys feel about an early 2018 studio follow-up to Witches Stew. "It got way out of our hands, beyond us in a good way," Coomes says of improv-heavy sessions honed after concerts that included new originals. "What we'd do after the show usually is grab some food, hang out in the back of the bus and listen to the [live] recordings," Deitch recalls. "I take a lot of notes on things that could have been better or that we should remember to record."

Expect a taste of that new material when Lettuce rolls into the Paradise Rock Club on Dec. 28, with Berklee professor and guitar guru Jeffrey Lockhart sitting in for Adam "Shmeeans" Smirnoff, who's tending to a new arrival in his own family.

The sextet also adds another element at shows these days: Nigel Hall both sings and plays keyboards on a permanent basis, contrasting the mostly instrumental brew with vocals that pump up the crowd. "We're here to party, but we mean business," cracks Coomes. "And we mean business, but we're here to party!" ◆

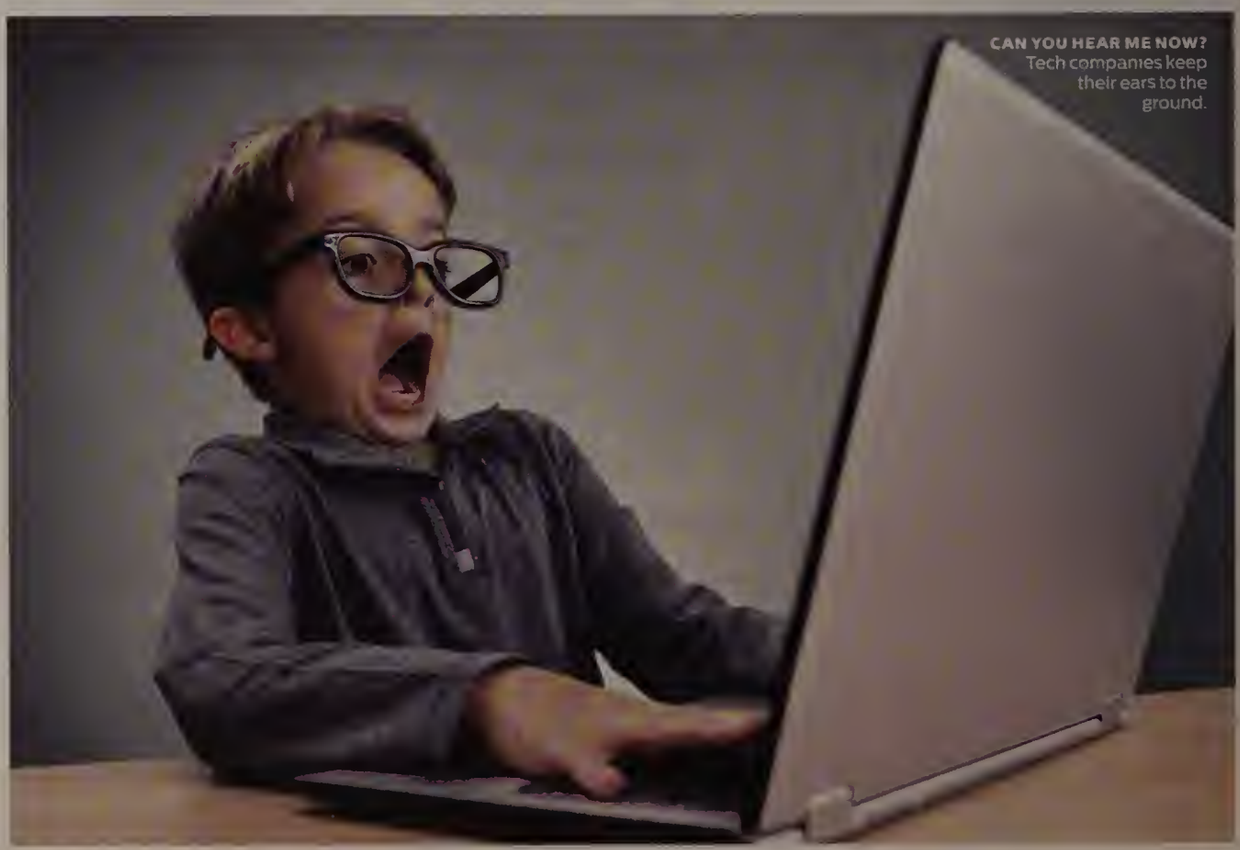
LISTEN CAREFULLY

THE FUTURE IS COMING—AND IT'S CONTROLLED BY THE EAVESDROPPERS

"Pass me the Weego," I say to my wife, Heather, as I survey the glistening swamp beneath our sink. It looks like our garbage disposal is leaking but I need a flashlight, and the Weego—a jump-starter battery gadget with a built-in flashlight—is sitting nearby on the counter. I've barely extricated myself from the cabinetry when Heather says, "OK, this is scary," and hands me her phone. Her Facebook feed is showing an ad for the Weego. "I've never searched for a Weego, emailed about a Weego, or written the word 'Weego,'" she says. "But you just said it out loud and now it's in my Facebook feed." I immediately grab a hammer and smash her eavesdropping phone into a dusty pile of silicon and Gorilla Glass. OK, no I don't. It's an iPhone 8 Plus. I don't care if the screen is permanently covered with a layer of cholera. Have you seen Portrait Mode? It's stunning.

Everybody has stories like this. You're talking about flannel pajamas or Wade Boggs or camel farts, and suddenly your phone is proffering ads for L.L. Bean, mustache trimmers and Gas-X Dromedary, the only anti-flatulence tablet specifically formulated for single-humped, even-toed ungulates. "Huh," you say, "That's an awfully specific coincidence." All the major tech companies deny that they're spying on you, and yet there seems to be plenty of evidence that this happens all the time. The official line from Google/Facebook/Apple is something like, "Sure, we could listen to you. But we don't. And if any of our app developers try those shenanigans, we'll nip it in the bud ... just as soon as we find out." Yeah, I'm sure they've got their top people on the case—the same ones who didn't think it was weird when American political ads were paid for in rubles.

But don't worry: It's not just the tech companies who are up in your business. It's your cable company, too. A few weeks ago I searched for an air compressor on my home laptop, and shortly thereafter my work laptop—no social media, totally separate email—began displaying Google ads for air compressors. My desire for an air compressor somehow leapt from machine to machine, browser to browser. I have a friend who writes about tech, and I asked him how this happened. "I suspect it's your internet service provider," he said. "They can probably see that the two IP addresses are in the same house, so they assume it's the same person with both computers and push ads between them." Remember that the next time you use your personal laptop to search job listings. Your work computer is in the corner like, "What? Just minding my own business over here getting ready to show you some ads for COBRA plans, Benedict Arnold."



I only recently learned that Amazon's Alexa records every question you ask her, so I went into the app to find out what she'd heard. There I discovered that Amazon has transcripts and recordings not only of every question I'd asked, but plenty that I hadn't. She's only supposed to activate upon hearing "Alexa," but it turns out that many other phrases will trigger a recording. For instance, I heard myself explaining the concept of core charges at auto parts stores, saying, "You pay a little extra and bring the old part back to them." Basically, she'll start recording for any name other than Fred, and thus you definitely don't want to do anything illegal within earshot of your Echo Dot. "I'm extra excited that a Mexican cartel accepts AmEx for the fake Rolexes that Biloxi expects," would be a bad thing to say in front of Alexa.

You definitely don't want to do anything illegal within earshot of your Echo Dot.

But at least I understand Alexa spying on me—a voice-activated assistant kind of has to listen. Roomba, though? How could you? I told Heather's Weego story to a friend in the security business, who informed me that illicit mic access was just one facet of the constant data harvest that is your life. "Roombas collect data now," he said. "They map the inside of your house, so, say, furniture companies could show you ads for furniture that would fit. And there are billboards that scan the cars driving past for phones and then sell ads in real time based on who they see." Both of these assertions seemed a little bit tinfoil-hat, so I checked them out. And yes, Roombas collect data, although iRobot says it doesn't sell it and only shares it if you want them to. And Clear Channel really does have a program called Radar that uses billboards to track you. Basically, the only guy who isn't being monitored by tech companies is your friend Xander who lives in a yurt and sells alpaca drug-rugs by the side of the road in Northampton.

I ought to write a letter to Apple and Google, Amazon and Facebook, Comcast and Verizon, and tell them exactly what I think about their invasions of privacy. But I have a feeling they already know. ◆

SOUND ADVICE ON WINTER GETAWAYS, NEGLIGENT NEIGHBORS AND BIG MOUTHS

JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book is No One Ever Told Us That: Money and Life Lessons for Young Adults. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com.

My wife and I own a house in ski country, and every winter, we open the doors to our family. They stay without charge, making it a very popular destination during the colder months. The problem is that the infighting begins as soon as the first snow falls. Everyone in the family always wants the same weeks: Christmas and February vacation, etc. We can only sleep an extra four people at a time, so there's no way they could all stay together. This is not a hotel, and we're starting to resent people feeling they have the right to expect a certain time be held for them. Do you have any suggestions so that everyone gets a fair stay? Help! This is a pretty easy one, but, in today's family climate, it's made tougher by this question: Who are the adults in the house? Sorry, folks, but I think it should be the parents who run the household, not the children—even the adult children. There are times when being a benevolent dictator makes life easier on everyone.

Devise a schedule that is "set in stone" for the family. This year, one side of the family gets the year-end holidays. The other side gets the mid-winter school vacation. Next year, they flip the weeks. Or you can toss a coin to choose who gets those weeks in December and January. This saves the arguing and the drama. People will always complain about fairness, but if you stick to the "set in stone" schedule, that should keep the calm.

Of course, if you want to be snarky you could always say, "If you married someone whose parents had a vacation house, you wouldn't have this problem!"

I am a new condo owner in the city, and my unit backs up to a small green space. I've been told that for many years this space has been "cared for" by a neighbor and her husband, but the space is in rough shape—overgrown and unsightly. My windows overlook this site, while the rest of the condo property has nicely landscaped areas. We pay high condo fees, and I would like the condo association and its landscaper to take back control of this green space and make it nice. My neighbors see it as their garden and don't want a landscaper to touch it. I have had a friendly relationship with them so far, but should I make an issue of this? Or should I keep quiet and stay in the good graces of my neighbors?

My sense is that in any association—condos, proprietorships, boards of governors, etc.—a very small minority of the population are a pain. They're relentless in their complaints about all types of issues, and they're oblivious to the wishes of the majority. In many cases I've witnessed, they can damage the morale of the communities they live and work in. The space you describe is on the condo property. If your neighbors have tended to it as a garden for the use of all, growing flowers and vegetables, then that's wonderful. But if it's as unsightly and overgrown as you say, then it's time for the association to take it back, grow some grass and have it cut. Obsessions fester when people hold things inside. My advice is, "Out with it." Speak your mind and insist that you get to look onto urban green, not urban blight.

Sorry, folks, but I think it should be the parents who run the household, not the children—even the adult children.

Lately it seems like I am constantly sticking my foot in my mouth. A few examples: At Halloween, I complimented a co-worker on her costume, only it wasn't a costume. Ouch. Then at a dinner party I asked a woman when the baby was due, but she wasn't pregnant. Ouch again. Do you know how I can recover from these awful missteps and social gaffes? I just want to run and hide when they happen. You have to turn a "faux pas" into "triomphe," a gaffe into a "victoire." We're all guilty of the same thing at one time or another. I'd try hyperbole to get you out of the situations. For instance, to your co-worker, I'd say, "You know, you always have such a flair for clothing. I noticed it when I first came to this company, so I think of you as someone who pulls together a great costume every day, not just on Halloween." You turn a gaffe into a flattering compliment.

As for the "pregnant" reference, there's only one way to go in my opinion, and that's what I call "over-the-top sincerity." You can tell her, "I'm sorry. Pregnant women glow with a special radiance, and your skin looks that way to me." I'll never tell. ◆

THE ICE IS RIGHT

THE BLACK-AND-GOLD FORWARD CHATS ABOUT NICKNAMES, CZECH BEER AND PREGAME MEDITATION

BOSTON BRUINS RIGHT WINGER DAVID PASTRNAK, 21, was born and raised in the Czech Republic. His father encouraged him to pursue hockey, and he was the Bruins' first-round pick in 2014. On Nov. 24 of that year, he made his NHL debut and later that season became the franchise's youngest player ever to score a game-winning goal in overtime of a regular-season game. Last season, he tallied the second most points on the team before signing a six-year, $40 million contract extension with the Bruins in September.

JONATHAN SOROFF: So Pasta's your nickname. Is it your favorite food?
DAVID PASTRNAK: No. When my dad played hockey, they called him Pasta, and so I got it from him. But it's funny: Pasta in Czech means toothpaste, so I'm spaghetti and toothpaste at the same time.

How old were you the first time you put on skates? Three. That was the first time I played hockey. They were ladies' skates because they had no sizing for me back then.

You were the youngest Bruin when you joined, not even legal to drink a beer. Did your teammates treat you like a little kid? No. They treated me just like one of them. A lot of them were older than me, but they taught me and were really good to me.

Strangest thing you've ever used a hockey stick for? [Laughs]. Interesting. I used a hockey stick to hang my suits in my car. When I was moving, I put the stick in the back seat and I hung my clothes on it.

Biggest extravagance after you signed your latest contract? I bought a house and a car—a new [Porsche] Panamera, 2018.

Favorite thing to do off the ice? During the season, most of the time I just lie down on the couch and watch some TV shows. But I'm an active guy, so in the summer I do a lot of different sports. I don't like doing nothing. But the hockey season is long, so I kinda like my privacy and my downtime.

Where do you spend the offseason? Back home in Prague.

Thing you miss the most about the Czech Republic? Family and friends, obviously, but also the beer. Czech beer is very good.

Thing you like the most about Boston? I like so much. The city's fun. There's a bunch of good restaurants. There are a lot of young people here, so it's pretty rowdy, which I like. It's also really clean. I was surprised by how clean it was when I first got here.

Any good places to get Czech food here? No. In New York, there's a good one, and Edmonton has one, too. It's actually good that there isn't one here, so that I don't go a lot. But every time we play in New York, I'm excited to go to the restaurant because it's like being back home for a meal.

How's your golf game? Not very good. I just started last year. But I'm getting better. I'm more into tennis and soccer, but this is my second year playing golf. I'm working on it.

Worst injury? Probably when I broke my foot. That was pretty painful. But that's it. I've had pretty good luck, so hopefully that will keep going.

Do you have all your own teeth? I don't. I have a lot of half-teeth. I didn't lose a full tooth yet from hockey, but I've lost a lot of halves.

Even with a mouthguard? I don't use one. I can't wear that, although I should.

Is hockey more mental or physical for you? It's both. I think it's a little bit more mental, but it's tight.

Greatest hockey player of all time? My favorite is Mario Lemieux, but the obvious choice is Wayne Gretzky.

If you weren't a pro hockey player, what do you think you'd be doing? Hmm... that's a good question. I don't know. I'd probably play another sport. I'm pretty talented at sports, but I never liked school. So I wouldn't be a doctor, for sure.

Ever tried figure skating? No.

Speedskating? No.

Messiest player in the locker room? Probably Charlie McAvoy. He's always leaving his stuff all over the locker room, everywhere.

Do you have any rituals or superstitions before games? I meditate for two minutes, and I jump in the full-body cold tub. Those are the two biggest.

Favorite city to play in? Probably Dallas—or anywhere else that's warmer than here. It's always nice to get warm in the winter.

Least favorite? Winnipeg. [Laughs]. It's cold there, and there aren't a lot of good restaurants, so it's usually room service.

If you were going to play in the Olympics, would it be for the U.S. or the Czech Republic? Czech Republic, for sure. Never forget where you're from.

Biggest joker on the team? Brad Marchand.

Most uncomfortable part of your uniform or gear? None of it. It's really comfortable. I love wearing them. The jerseys and the socks are a pleasure to wear. The hardest equipment to wear is probably the pads. They're heavy.

When you're not in uniform, are you a clotheshorse? I have a huge amount of clothing. I buy a lot, usually online. I don't really care about brands or labels. If I like the style and it fits me, I buy it. If it costs 20 bucks or 200 bucks, I don't care.

Teammate you're closest with? I'm really close with David Krejci. You know, we're from the same country. Then Torey Krug and I are living close to each other, and we spend a lot of time together. Jake DeBrusk, a new guy, he's great. I got a lot of guys.

Something that would surprise people to know about you? I'm pretty good at drawing. I love it and I do it in my free time, sometimes.

What happens if you have to go to the bathroom in the middle of a game? [Laughs.] You hold it and wait till the period is over. Sometimes in practice, you'll be able to run away. It doesn't happen a lot, but in practice maybe. In a game, I don't think it would be a good idea.

What does life look like after hockey? I'm the kind of guy, I don't really think too far in advance. Maybe in a couple of years I should, but I'm pretty young, and I'm just enjoying every moment. I like to take it day by day and not look too far down the road. You can't plan anything, anyway, because so many things can change. ◆

"I don't really care about brands or labels. If I like the style and it fits me, I buy it. If it costs 20 bucks or 200 bucks, I don't care."

LIVE IN SOME SWEET DIGS // $6,575,000

The description for Unit 4105 in the forthcoming One Dalton skyscraper says it all: "You can almost see Cape Cod from this sky-high perch." But if being removed from the street-level fray isn't enough, there's more to this Back Bay building that will join the Pru and 200 Clarendon as titans of the Boston skyline when it's topped off early next year. Outside, a 5,000-square-foot park from landscape architect Michael Van Valkenburgh (Brooklyn Bridge Park and the under-construction Martin's Park) will add some life to the formerly windswept parcel near the Christian Science Plaza.

Inside, the Four Seasons will manage the entire building and run a hotel on the first 23 floors, including a restaurant as well as a 20-meter lap pool, a spa, salon and fitness center. The residents-only Club Lounge will be located on the 50th floor, complete with a theater and a golf-simulator room so you can swing your 9-iron from the clouds. Floor-to-ceiling windows in the south-facing Unit 4105 ensure there will be plenty of sunshine in the 2,190-square-foot, 2-bedroom, 2.5-bathroom condo. In addition to the high-end appliances and finishes, the unit includes a study and a great room. Not sold on this specific price range? Don't worry—units in One Dalton range from $3.25 million to $40 million.

ROCK A PAIR OF CUSTOM LEATHER SNEAKS // $115

Reebok takes the shoe-buying experience out of the box with its YourReebok customization shop. The brand's new global headquarters in Seaport's Innovation and Design Building houses its 7,600 square-foot flagship, where this ground-floor shop-within-a-shop focuses on craftsmanship over cookie-cutter kicks by offering one-on-one interactions with the store's cobbler. Customers can get their hands on various materials and pick out their soles, laces, eyelets and colors. Those feeling crafty can get in on the action themselves, or wait about an hour to pick up their order, which ranges in price from $85 for suede to $115 for the full-grain leather option. "The Classic Leather was chosen as the first shoe for this custom program because of its timeless history," says Paul Froio, Reebok's vice president of U.S. retail. Although choosing colors that speak to your soles is a perk, the real treat is the leather. "The leather we use is a fine soft garment leather," Froio says. "It's kind of like slipping into a pair of your favorite slippers."

TOP IT OFF WITH TRUFFLE // $45

Eataly Boston's truffle-centric pop-up Il Tartufo returns this year with a new menu for the season. At La Piazza, guests can sample their way across various Italian regions while enjoying truffle-focused dishes such as salsiccia al tartufo and tajarin al burro through January. "Found underground in northern and central Italy, truffles are called 'diamonds of the Italian kitchen' and are considered culinary gold," executive chef Jason Neve explains. "They add an element of luxury with their pungent, seasonal flavors." For an extra touch of earthiness, diners can also add three grams of freshly shaved truffle to any plate for $45, elevating options like the uova con pane in crosta, a poached egg with housemade bread and truffle butter.

RIDE ON A DOORS-OFF COPTER // $299

Photo enthusiasts, aviation lovers and thrill-seekers flock to Hover Boston's doors-off helicopter ride above the city. Launched a couple of years ago, Hover Boston allows up to four passengers to enjoy unobstructed, panoramic views from 1,000 feet up with an open cabin/cockpit layout and removed doors. The tour company from Tuckamore Aviation welcomes smartphones and cameras and provides safety harnesses for each passenger to keep them secure as they lean over to capture the perfect shot. The Boston City Tour ($199 per person) is a 30-minute flight over iconic spots such as Fenway Park, Boston Common and the Prudential. But for those who seek even more scenic New England views, the 45-minute Boston Harbor Tour ($299 per person) allows you to get up close with the Graves and Boston lighthouses before circling back to glide over the city. "Honestly, the entire experience is exhilarating," says operations manager Jeff Hubbard. "From the feeling you get lifting off vertically and taking in the views that stretch as far as New Hampshire, to then feeling like you could reach out and touch the skyline of the city." The experience isn't simply for adrenaline junkies: Each tour is led by a pilot with more than 3,000-hours experience in the air, making for a smooth, stable ride for passengers to take in the views and—for those feeling more adventurous—even dangle their toes out of the cabin. "We're offering an experience from start to finish and not just a quick tour of the city," Hubbard says. "Helicopters are a fun way to see the city and harbor, but flying with the doors off takes it to another level."

DRINK IN THE VIEWS FROM AN IGLOO // $15

The Envoy Hotel's Lookout Rooftop and Bar elevates wintertime cocktail sipping with its arctic-inspired igloos. On Wednesdays through Saturdays from 4 to 10 pm, the public can pop into one of six domes decked out with area rugs, communal tables, eight to 10 chairs and warmed to a cozy 65 degrees through mid-April. Or customers can really feel the heat by grabbing a fleece blanket and opting for one of the newest specialty cocktails whipped up by Brian McDougall, including the Mulled Toddy featuring bourbon and red wine with nutmeg, cinnamon and allspice. When you're ready for round two, press the button to light up the igloo and get the attention of your server. We suggest indulging your rosé habit year-round with the Rose Fitz—rosemary-infused Meyer lemon vodka mixed with cranberry and topped with sparkling Campo Viejo cava—that you can drink in with the city skyline views.

Magellan also offers on-ground concierge services to ensure guests are set with tickets, reservations or other extras on the trip. CHARTER A BOAT FOR A DAY // $1,200

Classic Sail Boston's 45-foot Captiva sailboat is a popular pick for those seeking to cruise through the Boston Harbor in groups of up to six people. Built in 2011 with manila lines and canvas sails, it's a replica of the skipjack vessels that often cruised through the Chesapeake Bay more than a century ago. Although shorter time periods are available, the eight-hour excursion features catering from a local eatery such as KO Pies or James Hook, and guests can tailor the trip to fit their wishes. Owner David Puett recalls bachelor parties that throw anchor behind an island, blast some music and down some drinks or hop into the water for a swim. But other times, the boat is used for marriage proposals, a wedding or to scatter a loved one's ashes. Puett boasts: "We were in the Tall Ships parade, and we were the only charter boat I know of that hosted a private charter as a participating vessel."

REFRESH YO' FACE // $135

The Chuan Body + Soul Spa at the Langham Hotel Boston can help counteract the affects of dry winter weather—and one too many holiday parties—with a facial treatment that taps into the ocean for its ingredients. Focusing on hydration, the Source Marine spa service uses Séve Marine, an active ingredient derived from highly potent algae and seawater that acts as a moisturizing and rebalancing agent. "Chuan is based on traditional Chinese medicine, which is based around the elements and nature," spa supervisor Karima Scarpa explains. "Using the elements allows guests to reconnect with nature and utilize natural healing." The multi-step treatment, which is available for $135 a person ($280 per couple), includes a 15-minute massage for the face, neck and shoulders and a Hydro Moisture Source Mask to improve overall texture and leave skin feeling extra soft.

DIVE INTO CRUDO DELIGHTS // $30

There are plenty of fish in the sea at Colin Lynch's coastal Italian spot Bar Mezzana—and plenty can be sampled with the $30 crudo tasting. The chef/partner offers six two-bite portions from his daily-changing roster for diners who want to dip their toes into raw seafood or as a smaller sampling for guests who want to sink their teeth into numerous other menu items—he even suggests it for those flying solo at the bar. And take note: "If there is anything on our crudo menu that guests specifically want to try, we are always happy to make it one of the six selections on the tasting."

The first serving's rolled out with three crowd-pleasers and Bar Mezzana staples, like salmon and yellowtail, but when it comes to the second round, Lynch says, "We get a little more adventurous, which gives us the opportunity to introduce guests to fish they may have never had or even heard of." Think mild mackerel-like Kamasu, Japanese barracuda that's shipped in weekly from Tokyo's Tsukiji fish market and served lightly torched with the skin on. Guests frequently get an extra luxe element with some topped caviar, often on Lynch's favorite crudo—shima aji—a striped jack with horseradish oil, lemon and hackleback, a wild caviar from Illinois. But all customers can up the fancy factor with a sparkling Ribolla Gialla that Lynch says pairs well with whatever may make an appearance that night: "It is clean, bright and absolutely perfect with all of the subtleness and acid in our crudo."

Perhaps you've heard of The Room. Frequently cited as one of the worst films ever, this 2003 drama-cum-accidental comedy has been selling out raucous midnight shows on weekends for years—as the poor ushers at the Coolidge Corner Theatre can attest, stuck as they are cleaning up the hundreds of plastic spoons that have been thrown toward the screen. (Don't ask.) The film stars writer/director Tommy Wiseau, a vaguely European-accented man (he claims he's from New Orleans) who displays no real talent either in front of or behind the camera, though he's embraced his notoriety as a modern-day Ed Wood. And like Tim Burton's 1994 biopic of that ambitious but troubled filmmaker, director/star James Franco's The Disaster Artist is a ridiculously entertaining portrait of a mysterious man with delusions of genius, as seen by Wiseau's co-star in The Room and then-best friend, Greg Sestero (played here by James' younger brother Dave), who penned the memoir this film is based on. Franco dons facial prosthetics, long dark hair and ever-present sunglasses as he completely inhabits this oddball, a man whose only previous exposure to cinema seems to be a couple of films starring Marlon Brando and James Dean. Light as air and co-starring many of Franco's friends—from Seth Rogen to Paul Scheer and cameos by dozens more—it's a fun behind-the-scenes romp, even if you've never seen the film it's sending up. COCO ★★1/2 With its 19th film in in 22 years, Pixar Animation Studios has finally addressed the lack of ethnic diversity in its movies, having already tackled another deficiency with Brave and Inside Out, a pair of pictures that featured strong starring roles for female protagonists. Now, at a time when talk of building a wall along the Mexican border continues, it's nice to see a family film take pains to humanize our neighbors to the south without coming off as a polemic. So it's unfortunate that Coco—Pixar's colorful celebration of Mexico's people, cultures and traditions—lacks the emotional core of some of the studio's finest efforts. Despite a gorgeous adventure that journeys from the Land of the Living to the Land of the Dead and back, Coco ranks with The Good Dinosaur and the aforementioned Brave, minor works that, while dazzling to look at, failed to fully engage the heart. Starring a rebellious 12-year-old, aspiring singer and self-taught guitarist Miguel Rivera (voiced by newcomer Anthony Gonzalez), the film opens in a fictional Mexican village during Día de Muertos (or "Day of the Dead"), before a curse sends Miguel and his endearingly daft dog to an imaginatively realized underworld populated by cuddly skeletons. It's just a shame that the storytelling can't quite match Director Lee Unkrich (Toy Story 3) and co-director Adrian Molina's superbly rendered visuals. And for all the focus on music, the original songs surprisingly underwhelm. It says a lot that a maudlin ballad entitled "Remember Me" would prove so unmemorable. Kind of like the film. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

DADDY'S HOME 2 ★★1/2 Daddy's Home was the first Will Ferrell vehicle that left me stone-faced. He's a gangly, doughy performer who's been making me laugh for more than two decades with his dim, goofy characters, including his first pairing with Mark Wahlberg in The Other Guys. In that film from director Adam McKay (Anchorman, Talladega Nights and Step Brothers), the two were hilarious as mismatched police detectives. But the tepid Daddy's Home that reunited the duo was pure torture to sit through. I'd always appreciated Ferrell's R-rated antics, but he was completely neutered in Sean Anders' 2015 family vehicle, where he played Brad Whitaker, a sensitive wimp who's emasculated by Wahlberg's alpha male, Dusty Mayron, the father of Brad's stepchildren. The film was a huge hit, however, so here we are two years later with Anders' creatively titled sequel, Daddy's Home 2. Surprisingly, it's not awful. Credit the addition of John Lithgow as Brad's father, retired postal carrier Don, and especially Mel Gibson as Dusty's dad, former space shuttle pilot Kurt. Mad Mel brings just the right amount of discomforting edge that Anders' original so sorely lacked, and his inappropriate behavior (a winking riff on Gibson's real-life persona) almost digs the Christmas-set film out from under a saccharine third act in which a snowstorm strands the warring clans in a movie theater together. I know how they feel. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Darkest Hour ★1/2 The second Winston Churchill biopic of the year (after Brian Cox's commanding but little-seen turn in Jonathan Teplitzky's Churchill) and the third film to feature the evacuation at Dunkirk (after Lone Scherfig's delightful Their Finest and Christopher Nolan's time-shuffling Dunkirk), this is also the worst of the lot. That's not a terribly surprising revelation since the film is from director Joe Wright, whose love of the stage hasn't translated particularly well to the screen, as evidenced by his last two pictures, Anna Karenina and Pan. Just as turgid as both of those, Darkest Hour is a clear Oscar-grab for Gary Oldman, who puzzlingly moves with a swiftness of step that would be stunning even coming from someone half of Churchill's age and girth. Buried under mounds of nevertheless impressive makeup, Oldman's prime minister seems just as unstoppable as the Nazi forces that are rolling through Europe. And all of life's a speech, even when he decides to rub elbows with the Common Man in the London Underground. The entire film is rather silly and cartoonish, and just the type of historical drama the Academy might eat up. Overlit by cinematographer Bruno Delbonnel (who's usually much better than this), the film is weighted down with artificiality, which extends to Wright's staging of the Dunkirk retreat. I wouldn't be surprised to find that Oldman's fat suit is filled with pork, since this is the hammiest performance he's given in quite some time. He might have smelled an Oscar, but his performance reeks of Eau de Oscar Mayer. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

Lady Bird ★★★★ If you liked last year's highly praised The Edge of Seventeen, a delicate comedic drama about high school life for an awkward teen girl, you'll love the similarly themed, yet even more perceptive coming-of-age tale, Lady Bird. The stunning, semi-autobiographical writing/directing debut of Greta Gerwig—a wonderfully idiosyncratic actress who penned the strong screenplays for 2012's Frances Ha and 2015's Mistress America, a pair of films she also starred in for her partner of six years, director Noah Baumbach—is easily one of the year's best films. One of the better directorial decisions she made was to retain those movies' cinematographer, Sam Levy, but her best decision of all: Hiring two-time Oscar nominee Saoirse Ronan (the 23-year-old star of Brooklyn) to portray Christine "Lady Bird" McPherson. Like Gerwig, Lady Bird was 17 in 2002, and living in Sacramento, "the Midwest of California," while not-so-secretly dreaming of moving to New York. Christine's also fond of claiming she lives on "the wrong side of the tracks," which sets up one of the film's many big laughs when her first boyfriend (Lucas Hedges, an Oscar nominee for last year's Manchester by the Sea) meets her mother (Laurie Metcalf from TV's Roseanne, in her best role in years) and observes that "I always thought that was, like, a metaphor, but there are actual train tracks." Bittersweet and truthful, this is one to see with your mom. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

The Man Who Invented Christmas ★★1/2 In this age of superhero cinema, Charles Dickens receives his long-overdue origin story in Bharat Nalluri's The Man Who Invented Christmas, which circumvents the visually boring act of setting quill to parchment by dramatizing Dickens (the ubiquitous Dan Stevens, who's appeared in five movies and starred in a TV show this year!) as a seeming schizophrenic who's visited by the characters from A Christmas Carol as he writes them. That's right, he's treated to visions of and conversations with the likes of Ebenezer Scrooge (Christopher Plummer), Jacob Marley (Donald Sumpter) and even the Ghost of Christmas Past (Anna Murphy), each of whom turn up like, well, the ghosts in his novel as the cash-strapped author works out the kinks of his story in the scant weeks it takes him to craft it. The film was adapted from a book by Les Standiford, and I can only imagine that the screenplay by actress Susan Coyne (Amazon's Mozart in the Jungle) has taken a few liberties with Standiford's nonfiction text. A tale like this requires not only a light hand—which Nalluri possesses—but also a stylized visual sensibility. On this last count, the film falls flat, feeling more like a budget-rate TV movie than the cinematic piece of fictionalized history it begs to have been. Still, Plummer's scrappy Scrooge is worth the price of admission alone. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Thor: Ragnarok ★★★1/2 Even though he's an A-list member of the mighty Avengers, Thor's first two solo films aren't the most beloved of the previous movies in Disney's ever-expanding Marvel Cinematic Universe. As played by Australia's Chris Hemsworth, the character's been best used as comic relief in Joss Whedon's team-based blockbusters, 2012's The Avengers and 2015's Avengers: Age of Ultron. But now, under offbeat director Taika Waititi (What We Do in the Shadows) Marvel's God of Thunder has emerged as its new king of comedy, tossing off witty bon mots between bouts of swinging his enchanted hammer. Mind you, Thor: Ragnarok still features super-powered brawls and an effects-driven climax stuffed with CGI overkill, but Waititi's emphasis on improvisation allows Hemsworth to stretch his legs beyond the confines of a fairly boilerplate script. Structured as a buddy comedy, Hemsworth pairs with a rotating roster of sparring partners to alternately banter with and battle. Joined once again by his adopted brother Loki (Tom Hiddleston), he also teams up with alcoholic scavenger Valkyrie (Tessa Thompson of Creed) and Korg, a soft-spoken, Kiwi-accented warrior made of rock, a digital creation that's voiced with dim-witted soul by Waititi himself. The best pairing, however, is the matchup of Thor and his fellow Avenger, the Incredible Hulk (Mark Ruffalo), an ill-tempered hero who's as petulant as Thor is vain. But it's Waititi who emerges as this film's MVP. Like Loki and Thor rolled into one, Waititi's both the trickster and the hero that this series so desperately needed. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Three Billboards Outside Ebbing, Missouri ★★★1/2 Let's get right to it: Those three billboards, spread out one after another on a stretch of back road, display a simple succession of messages. The first, "RAPED WHILE DYING," is followed by "AND STILL NO ARRESTS?" Then finally, "HOW COME, CHIEF WILLOUGHBY?" Since a highway was built, few people will drive past them, but Mildred Hayes (Frances McDormand, Oscar-winning actress from Fargo) has made her point, succinctly. She's purchased the outdoor ad space after her teenaged daughter's corpse was found. It's been seven months without any answers, so the hardened woman, scarred from grief, has gone public with her grievance against the local police and their captain (Woody Harrelson, in a well-measured turn). McDormand and her character are a force to be reckoned with, which she ably demonstrates when she dresses down a condescending priest, using words that would make Jesus himself blush. It's no surprise then that the film is the brainchild of British writer/director Martin McDonagh, the talented playwright who made one hell of a feature film debut with 2008's In Bruges. His follow-up, Seven Psychopaths, wasn't nearly as accomplished, but his latest is a return to form. As you might suspect, the film doesn't quite go where you expect, which is half the fun—when there's fun to be had. A somber, sobering affair, you won't soon forget the explosive exchanges, nor the odd characters played by pros like Sam Rockwell and Peter Dinklage. (At Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Wonder ★★★1/2 The trailers for Wonder were worrisome, making it look like a mawkish tear-jerker designed to exploit Julia Roberts' glassy eyes and megawatt smile as she plays Isabel Pullman, mother of a sweet 10-year-old named Auggie (Jacob Tremblay, the talented star of 2015's Room), a boy who's had to endure 27 operations to deal with a facial deformity. But you should have faith in filmmaker Stephen Chbosky, who made a splash with The Perks of Being a Wallflower, the semi-autobiographical high school drama he adapted from his own novel. Now, he's working from someone else's novel, a best-seller by R.J. Palacio that has transitioned splendidly to the big screen. Auggie has been home-schooled by his loving mom who sacrificed her dreams to raise the physically and emotionally scarred young science nerd, to the detriment of her neglected older daughter, Via (Izabela Vidovic from TV's About a Boy). But everyone's lives are about to change, now that Isabel and her husband Nate (Owen Wilson) have made the difficult decision to enroll Auggie in fifth grade with other children, a prospect that terrifies all of them. Kids can be cruel, after all. Chbosky displays a great amount of empathy for all of his characters, presenting his warm-hearted drama—a rallying call against bullying—as a true ensemble piece, one that surprises with its constantly evolving point of view and shifting narrations that provide a deeper understanding of everyone involved. Bring tissues. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Wonder Wheel ★★ Forget the fact that Woody Allen has once again made a film that seems to hold his personal life under a microscope—a creative type contemplates leaving his middle-aged lover for her young stepdaughter—and you'll still find that he's repeating himself, badly. He trots out at least one movie a year, recycling ideas that he handled better in earlier decades. So it's a shame that as he ages (he's 82), the themes that he keeps exploring have become downright hackneyed compared with the adventuresome visual approach he's taken with his past two pictures. Legendary cinematographer Vittorio Storaro, who deservedly won Oscars for The Last Emperor, Reds and Apocalypse Now, sumptuously photographed last year's Café Society and now Wonder Wheel. In his time, the Italian master shot better-looking film than most, and he's doing the same with digital photography now that he's adopted the newer medium. The warm, saturated images evoke a '50s-era Coney Island that likely only exists in people's imaginations, and here, the colors and light magically change with characters' moods. It's a sight to behold, and I'd recommend seeing it on the biggest screen possible. Just be aware that the blue-collar schlubs played by Kate Winslet, Jim Belushi, Juno Temple and Justin Timberlake (as the Allen surrogate/narrator) appear to have wandered in from a junior high-mounted Tennessee Williams play. You've been warned. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

BACK TO THEIR ROOTS

The legendary Roots crew is trading laughs for the spotlight this December when they step out of Studio 6B—where they plant themselves onstage as the house band on The Tonight Show Starring Jimmy Fallon—and into the House of Blues. Four Grammys and 30 years after first forming, high school friends Questlove and Black Thought are nowhere close to pulling the plug. The now eight-man band is once again gifting its jazzy riffs and hip-hop rhythms to live audiences with the 2017 Holiday Tour. No thank-you notes are required when the Roots head to the House of Blues on Dec. 26. / Hannah McKennett

Your immune system may be the key to beating cancer.

Immunotherapy, a new approach to cancer treatment, is bringing hope to cancer survivors everywhere. Immunotherapy works by empowering your body's own immune system to correctly identify and eradicate cancer cells. This approach has been used to effectively fight many types of cancer, with new research leading to greater hope each day. Speak with your doctor and visit standuptocancer.org/immunotherapy to learn if immunotherapy may be right for you.

PIGMENTS OF YOUR IMAGINATION

Things are looking bright at Kingston Gallery, where Rose Olson uses colors and shapes inspired by natural elements in her latest abstract series, Bright, Cool and Hot, on display in the Main Gallery. The Tufts grad creates each piece by layering paint on wooden panels, allowing the grain texture to shine through, such as in diptych Up Around the Sun, seen above, which showcases contrasting warm and cool tones. The South End artist also shows off her work alongside two family members in the Center Gallery's 3 Views, featuring Bradford Olson's works of plastic medium poly-lactic acid and Elizabeth Olson's photography. Come feel the heat through Dec. 30. / Julia Aparicio

TRIGGER WARNING

Horrific gun-related tragedies too often grabbed the headlines in 2017. In the wake of more than a decade of horrific mass shootings, Bullets into Bells features a collection of poems meant to serve as a rallying cry to end all gun violence in America. The foreword is written by former U.S. Rep. Gabrielle Giffords and her husband Mark Kelly—who have been outspoken gun-control advocates since the 2011 assassination attempt that left Giffords severely wounded. Each poem is followed by commentary from activists, concerned citizens and political figures, including Samaria Rice and Lucy McBath, mothers of children lost to gun violence. Listen up when the Boston Public Library hosts editors Brian Clements, Alexandra Teague and Dean Rader on Dec. 13. / Brenna Donovan

HOPE FLOATS

A century of improving mental health for the kids of Massachusetts is certainly worth toasting, but the Hopes and Dreams Gala to benefit the Judge Baker Children's Center did so in rare style.

Symphony Hall was decked out more beautifully than ever for the centennial celebration, with giant triangular topiaries wrapped in a swirl of white butterflies soaring toward the rafters. The rarefied crowd, meanwhile, included the likes of keynote speaker Patrick Kennedy, honoree Dick Glovsky and his radiant wife, Hilary, staunch supporter Dorothy Weber, former first couple Deval and Diane Patrick, Berkshires yoga guru Susan Parsley, uber-philanthropists Cindy and Oliver Curme, Chestnut Hill doyenne Roberta Cohn, distinguished doctor Bruce Auerbach and his lovely wife, Robin Richman, the formidable Lorraine Bressler, dapper entrepreneur Hillel Bachrach, co-host Robin Young, and one woman who said, "I've been on this board since before my menopause set in."

However, the evening's best remark was: "I'm an M.D. That stands for 'Missus Doctor.'"

A SHETLAND PONY WALKS INTO THE RITZ

That might sound like the start of a bad joke, but it was only one of the highlights of Horsing Around at the Ritz—a black-tie blowout to raise money for Bina Farm's adaptive riding and other programs.

Bringing a whole new meaning to the term "special guests," the evening managed to wow even the most jaded of gala-goers, and this crowd was anything but junior varsity. Among them: The charity's founders, Coryn and Babak Bina with their camera-ready sons Kamran and Aidan, Pops conductor Keith Lockhart and his knockout wife, Emiley, Persian beauty Maryam Rahmani, car czarina Melissa Steffy, alternative energy guru Jim Gordon and his lovely other half, Denise Fahmie, S'Wellesley denizens Harris and Paul Krupp and Liz and Mike Fish, latter-day Fanny Brice Lorna Brunelle, and so on and so forth.

The evening began with cocktails and schmoozing and continued with dinner and some highly amusing on-stage shenanigans, but the undisputed highlight was a performance by Carly Simon, accompanied by her offspring, Sally and Ben Taylor, his bride-to-be, Sophie Hiller, and tween angels Paris Noble and Lillian Ellmore.

The best exchange: "I love your dress."

"Thanks. I couldn't tell if it was too Golden Girls-meets-depressing Christmas Eve at a nursing home."

THE ONLY THING MISSING WAS THE MARX BROTHERS

World premieres tend to attract an interesting crowd, and that was certainly the case at the opening night of the Boston Lyric Opera's production of The Nefarious, Immoral but Highly Profitable Enterprise of Mr. Burke & Mr. Hare (not a title that comes trippingly off the tongue, as one attendee pointed out).

Staged brilliantly in the round at the BCA's Cyclorama, the Victorian tale about a pair of murderers who sell bodies to a medical school as cadavers wowed the crowd, which included honorees Jeffrey and Jane Marshall, arts patrons Gokie and Lee Perry, dashing pair Peter Wender and Carl Henry, statuesque blond Willa Bodman and her handsome other half, Taylor, Yankee Doodle Dandy Nicholas Danforth, mega benefactor Maria Stata, the hale and hearty Sam Plimpton with his comme il faut wife, Wendy Shattuck, financial wizard Yue Zheng, South End nabobs Kurt Gress and Samuel Parkinson, the super stylish Toinette ter Haar and her other half, Ernst, MIT musical genius Tod Machover, WGBH host Chris Voss, the opera's librettist, Mark Campbell, composer Julian Grant, and one guest who said, "I think the title of my autobiography is going to be Excessive Encore."

After the performance, guests filed over to the Benjamin Franklin Institute for an elegant dinner, which definitely won originality points for place cards that looked like toe tags.

Overheard by the bar: "As a kid, I didn't know I was born here, and my grandmother always threatened to have me deported."

WUNDERBAR

An event called the Wonder Ball has a lot to live up to, but the fact that there were guests who flew all the way from the U.A.E. to attend is proof that the black-tie hootenanny to benefit the Children's Museum is a fundraiser of epic proportions.

There's something slightly incongruous yet completely welcome about walking into a space usually crammed with little ankle-biting mouth-breathers and instead being greeted by a fully stocked bar. The gilded guest list included co-chairs Janna and Sean O'Neill, Phil and Julie Gordon, and Aisha Al Riyami and Wadhah Al-Adawi, the ridiculously gorgeous Jenny Fitzsimmons and her equally toothsome other half, Pedro Bonilla, do-gooding doctors Vanessa Kerry and Brian Nahed, best-seller machine Ben Mezrich and his fashion plate, Tonya, Colombian supermodel Pamela Vargas, equestrienne extraordinaire Christy Cashman, brunette yummy mummy Kathryn Burton and her main squeeze, Chad Jackson, all-around badass Sabra Katz, corkscrew-curled beauty Emma Pickard, and pretty much every other philanthropically inclined parent of a child in Boston.

After a delicious dinner and some blessedly brief remarks, the first floor was transformed into a psychedelic disco, prompting one guest to observe: "I'm shaking my ass where I'm usually wiping my 4-year-old's nose." ◆

FUTURE FOCUSED

I CAN BARELY RECALL WHAT I ATE for lunch a day ago, so those of you coming to this space for some sort of deep retrospective on 2017 will be disappointed. But I will say this: The empowering #MeToo movement is easily the story of the year. And—locally at least—watching the Patriots overcome a 28-3 deficit to win the Super Bowl is the most improbable event I watched in the past 12 months. That's all I got for 2017.

Besides, I find that it's always more interesting to look ahead at what might happen in the future, and our staff wanted to look beyond 2018. So Sarah Hagman and I rounded up a dozen influential names from across the city and split them into four groups at on-demand event space Convene, focusing on what 2028 might look like for the fashion, fitness, food and performing arts industries. There's some interesting ideas on Boston 2028, from a prediction by Joanne Chang that we could all be using aquafaba to a belief by Jay Adams of Brass Clothing that sustainable clothing will be ubiquitous. Check out some of the highlights in print or go to improper.com to hear the full audio of the conversations.

Elsewhere, Jonathan Soroff talks with our cover subject, actor Austin Stowell, who spent his summers on Martha's Vineyard as a kid. The 33-year-old has a big year on the horizon, starting with the release of the Chris Hemsworth-helmed 12 Strong. Soroff also bookmarks the best 2017 posts from a few of our favorite Instagram shutterbugs; I check in with the ICA, which is partnering with a dozen institutions across the city for its Art in the Age of the Internet exhibit, opening in early 2018; and Ezra Dyer goes on a culinary exploration of Quincy. Now could be a good time to head to the City of Presidents for a memorable lunch. Happy New Year!

THE ICA—AND A DOZEN OTHER ARTS INSTITUTIONS—TAKE A DIGITAL DIVE

Frank Benson's [illegible]

Cao Fei's RMB City: A Second Life City Planning

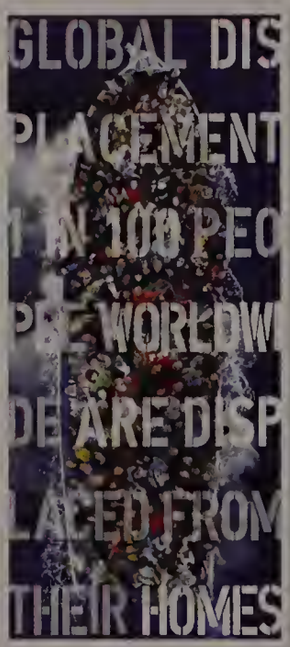
Prepare to Download

When the Institute of Contemporary Art was preparing to display its Art in the Age of the Internet exhibit (Feb. 7–May 20), the museum wanted to highlight Boston's technological history. And the exhibit's connection to the city now runs even deeper, with a dozen cultural institutions from the Harvard Art Museums to Boston Cyberarts joining in with their own digitally leaning shows in the first half of 2018. Even with the partners' programming, ICA curatorial assistant Jeffrey De Blois believes it's important for the message to not feel too vast.

"We think of this exhibition as an iteration, not something that was ever imagined to be comprehensive. There were of course so many more works that we could have included," De Blois says. "Organizing the exhibition thematically allowed us to hone in on these different subjects that speak to the larger concerns of the show. In fact, each of the thematic sections could have been ambitious exhibitions unto themselves."



Curator Eva Respini and De Blois started working on the project by choosing a few anchor pieces that best reflected the exhibit's title. That led to sections and themes built around those pieces, which showcase a variety of artists, mediums, times and places.

"Each of the sections asks specific questions that everyone can relate to, about how we are all producing and circulating images at a rapid pace, about how we view our bodies today, about how there is an increasing elision between life online and 'real life,' about surveillance, and about how we perform our identities online," De Blois says. "I think what is most striking about the works in Art in the Age of the Internet is that they often magnify idiosyncratic aspects of everyday life, asking us to be more aware of changes to our way of life."

Below, we rounded up a few of the other concurrent shows that you can catch at the start of 2018. For a full list of the partner events, go to improper.com. / Matt Martinelli

Screens: Virtual Material at the deCordova Sculpture Park & Museum (Through March 18)
This exhibit taps the work of six contemporary artists to display objects ranging from metal fences to TV monitors. The multimedia installation explores how screens, which are a major part of our daily lives, can shape behaviors and beliefs

Judith Barry Façade at the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum (Jan. 17–June 27)
This new outdoor installation from Barry will showcase the nearly 1 percent of the world's population that has been displaced from their homes. Shot using a drone, the collage shows asylum seekers crowding onto an inflatable boat with a mixture of relief and elation.

Slumpies at Tufts University (Jan. 16–April 15)
Jillian Mayer's sculptures are designed to hold people as they're using their device. The artist's works usually explore technology's effects on our lives, but this particular installation aims to affect your life—and posture—for the better

HOPELESS RAMEN-TIC

A RAMEN POP-UP FINDS A HOME IN THE FINANCIAL DISTRICT

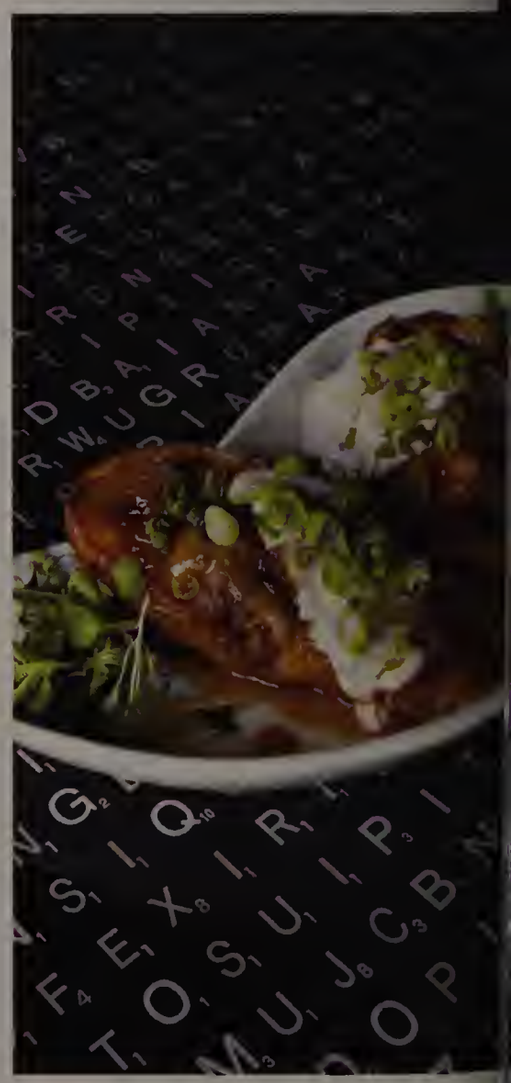
Chef Moe Kuroki's love for ramen runs deep. Born in Fukuoka, Japan, Kuroki came to the U.S. nearly 19 years ago to study metalsmithing at MassArt before turning her attention to cooking authentic Japanese ramen as a way to keep a connection to home. And now with a brick-and-mortar location for Oisa Ramen set to open in January, Kuroki has finally found somewhere to put down roots.

"I think of this place as home—home for Oisa and home for me," she says of the downtown Boston spot in part of the space formerly occupied by the Place—the rest of the old nightclub will be occupied by Christopher Straub's Tiki Rock Bar. "Ramen is a childhood food that brings me back to Japan. It's nice to create Oisa in Boston and have my second home."

Beginning in 2015, Kuroki held a string of successful ramen pop-ups at local establishments—including La Brasa, Snappy Ramen and Brassica Kitchen—garnering a loyal fan base despite no formal training. She began with a focus on tonkotsu ramen, a rich, meat-based broth popular in her hometown, but she recently made the decision to switch Oisa Ramen's main stock to a vegetarian one to add more variety to the menu. Kuroki describes the complex nature of learning to make traditional Japanese ramen as "a mysterious secret that feels like chasing some crazy unicorn."

Oisa will offer seven in-house ramen dishes that guests can enjoy for lunch on weekdays. That menu includes two tonkotsu (pork bone) and tsukekemen (dipping style) options as well as three shoyu (soy vegetable) ramens, such as the smokey shoyu ramen, made with burnt shallot oil, tomato noodles, bok choy, mushrooms and scallions. Guests have the option to enhance any dish with add-ons like pork belly or soy egg, and they can wash it all down with one of a few beers available. Kuroki will also offer three takeout rice bowls: gyu (beef), poke (marinated fish) and soboro (vegetarian) donburi.

The intimate space houses a seating area for five and a standing counter that accommodates up to eight guests, and Kuroki hopes the cozy, no-fuss atmosphere will encourage plenty of diners to "own their slurp."



"It's a gift for me to have someone come in and have this opportunity to share a little bit of my childhood with them," Kuroki says. "I really do feel like when people come in, they are coming into my home and into open arms."

Good Eats: Skin in the Game

Pete Stein is hoping that his new Inman Square bar, Wit's End, will be a spot where people forget their phones and actually talk to each other, encouraging friendly debate with a showdown-style menu that pits items head-to-head, such as two versions of fries for guests to hash out their fave. The movie title-inspired offerings also feature standalones, including the Buffalo Bill Special, named for The Silence of the Lambs villain. There's no debating that these potato skins with brisket, sharp cheddar and chipotle sour cream overflow with rich salty-sweet flavor, thanks to housemade bacon jam with maple syrup, apple cider vinegar and coffee. "It brings out a bold, robust flavor that's a little bit surprising," Stein says. / Nathan Tavares

CHAMPAGNE TASTES

There's no better all-purpose mood enhancer than Champagne—and this is the season it's on sale. Don't stress about which brand or bottle to buy as long as it's authentic, as no region in the world makes wines at a higher-quality level across the board. There are, however, subtle differences, and you may find one option below that best suits your palate for inaugurating 2018. / Sandy Block

TAITTINGER LA FRANCAISE BRUT, NV

Taittinger's house style epitomizes finesse and elegance. The majority of its vineyard holdings are in one of the region's highest rent districts, Côte de Blancs, where Chardonnay thrives on its mostly chalky soils. Lemony and crisp with vanilla and lightly toasty notes, this wine is delicate and long in the finish, and its crystalline purity harmonizes with shellfish, smoked fish or lobster.

$55, Cambridge Wine & Spirits

LAURENT-PERRIER CUVÉE ROSÉ BRUT, NV

Rosé Champagne is all over the map stylistically. Laurent-Perrier's is among the richest and boldest, with deep colors, toasty smoky flavors and a fuller body than most. One-hundred-percent pinot noir, it originates from vineyards in the clay-rich Montagne de Reims subregion. As with these other two recommendations, it's superb with fish. Buy a case and store it properly and it will continue to improve for a few years.

$85, Brix Boston

DUVAL-LEROY, BRUT RESERVE, NV

Opposite in style to the Taittinger, this family-owned producer—the only major Champagne house whose winemaker is a woman—uses 90-percent red grapes, so its brut features more cherry scents and a smoother, rounder texture. This absolutely delicious Champagne is not that well-known: The flavors are a touch spicier, more nut-like and mouth-filling, and are best to pair with crab, scallops and milder Asian curries.

$48, Urban Grape

FROM RUSSIA WITH UNHHHH

Katya Zamolodchikova has a new stage to slay: The Trixie & Kotyo Show, now airing on Viceland. The topic-based improv talk show is the drag sister spinoff of the hilarious YouTube series UNHhhh, where the hometown hero and RuPoul's Drog Race fan-favorite riffed with bestie and co-host Trixie Mattel on everything from hookups gone wrong to existentialism. We chatted with the sometimes high-class Russian hooker about the new show. / Nothon Tovores

YOU HOSTED ONE OF YOUR EARLIER YOUTUBE SHOWS FROM A DUMPSTER BEHIND A BAR IN BOSTON. HOW WOULD YOU SAY HOLLYWOOD COMPARES? It's just a teeny bit roomier. [Laughs.] ... I love it in L.A. I love, love, love it here. And I don't miss Boston very much. The only things I miss are the townies, the junkies and accent.

HOW WOULD YOU DESCRIBE THE TONE OF THE TRIXIE & KATYA SHOW? It's sort of like Kathie Lee and Hoda or Michael and Kelly on acid.

DOES THE SHOW HAVE A MISSION? It's basically unconventional advice from two people who are—for lack of a better term—bizarre outcasts and generous psychopaths. Well, not psychopaths. But it's refreshing advice on familiar topics from a new perspective that can be illuminating and funny. I mean, the point of the show is entertainment, but I actually really love giving advice.

WHAT ADVICE WOULD YOU GIVE TO YOURSELF FIVE YEARS AGO? Oh, God. I would say don't fuck your assistant. That is actually really good advice. If you ever want to dodge a really quick, hard fast bullet—completely dodge it and not have it go through any of your flesh and go to the hospital—I suggest try not fucking your assistant. Yeah.

DO YOU HAVE A DREAM GUEST FOR THE SHOW? I would love to have other comedians and actors on. I would love to have Maria Bamford. I would love to have Amy Sedaris. I would love to have a U.S. senator. And I think especially now with politics and especially for kids or alternative people, there's absolutely no trust or faith in the political process. And even more, you don't even know what the hell would compel a person to go into that line of work, other than some sense of vague job security and a paycheck. It's just so strange. I just want to ask them basic questions. I think that would be pretty illuminating.

Roll into the New Year with fresh takes on sushi from these new Boston spots. / Cathryn Haight

With a menu that combines Asian and American influences, it was a no-brainer for Rogue co-owner Kevin Ye to concoct a sushi pizza ($18), which debuted with the restaurant's November opening. The shareable plate begins with sushi rice sandwiched between two sheets of seaweed that's flash-fried until crispy. The "crust" is layered with chopped raw tuna and salmon, jalapeños, tomatoes, onions and scallions, then drizzled with spicy mayonnaise and sweet soy BBQ sauce.

Four varieties of sushi burrito inspired by co-owner Estefania Ladner's Latino heritage beckon on-the-go diners to Sushi Kappo, which opened in December. The house favorite Kappo ($13) includes a sheet of nori layered with sushi rice, avocado, cucumber, lettuce and red cabbage that's topped with spicy crabmeat and slices of tuna and salmon sashimi. Sushi lovers feeling saucy can add a drizzle of spicy mayo or sweet soy and a sprinkle of crispy tempura flakes before the burrito is rolled using a bamboo mat.

Newcomer Tora may have just opened in November, but the Chinatown spot specializes in a more traditional take on sushi. Kaisen don. Using a carefully selected grain of rice and fresh seafood, owner Kenix Wan aims to showcase quality ingredients in the simple sashimi and rice bowls. In the Uni Ikura Don ($24), she uses a secret vinegar mixture to make the sushi rice base before finishing the dish with marinated extra-large salmon roe and uni for a briny, sweet bite.

Lucky Charms

With South End stores on the same block, the collaboration between Patch NYC and M. Flynn works like a charm. Partners Don Carney and John Ross of lifestyle store Patch NYC teamed up with sister duo Megan and Moria Flynn—owners and designers of jewelry boutique M. Flynn—to release a number of charms based on Carney's whimsical India ink drawings. Described by Carney as "mini sculptures in gold," the capsule collection features customizable animals and motifs, including a whale, a skull and the most popular design—a cat with a detachable bow tie.

"We've had a couple of customers come in and choose specific colored eyes to coordinate with their own cat," Carney says. "It's been really great to see different colored stones dropped in."

The four friends launched their stores a year apart—M. Flynn opened in 2009, while Patch NYC came to Boston in 2010—but it wasn't until one evening last year that they began discussing the possibility of teaming up over dinner. Together, they hand-picked the images that worked best as multidimensional pendants, with Carney creating sketches that Moria Flynn then turned into wax renderings before casting them in 14-karat gold. The charms, which start at $980, are also accompanied by signed prints of the matching drawings from Carney.

"We've done jewelry for years, but never fine jewelry," Carney says. "They just have so much personality for something that's so tiny. They're very solid pieces." / Julia Aparicio

A WARM BODY

A MYSTERY SERIES KEEPS UP THE HEAT WITH ITS LATEST ENTRY

The Body in the Casket* by Katherine Hall Page
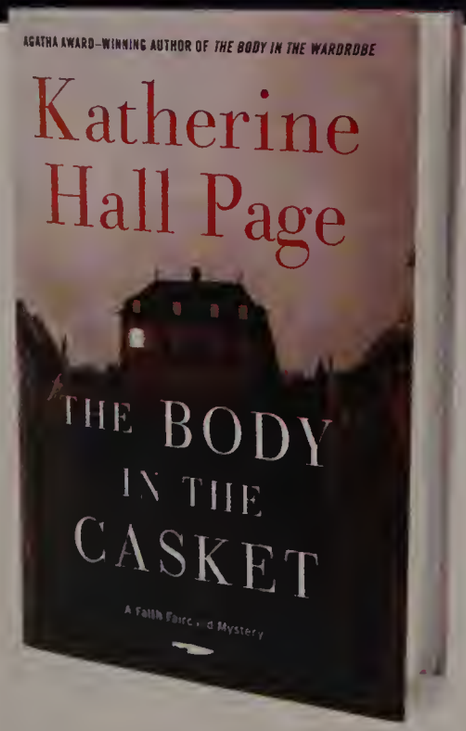
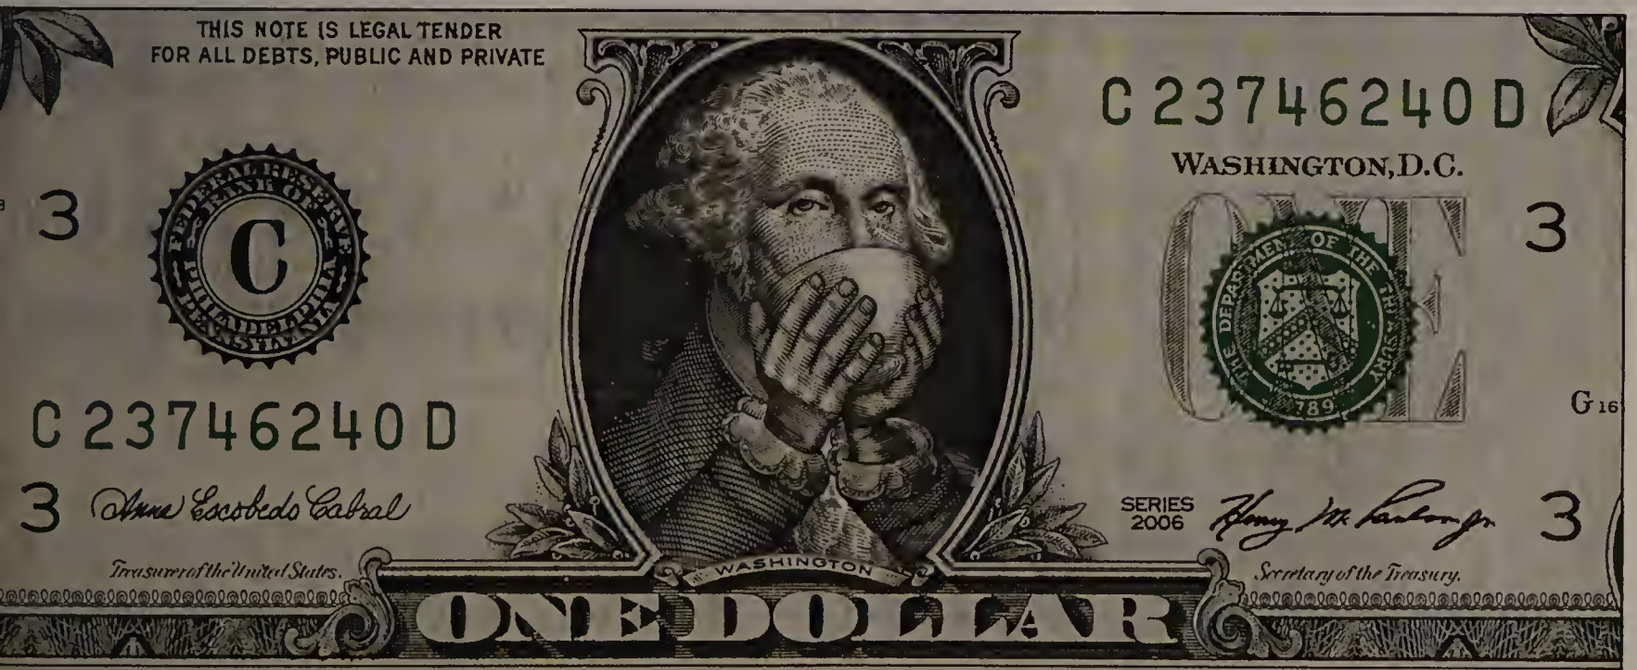
Published by William Morrow, 238 pages, $26

RETIRED BROADWAY PRODUCER MAX Dane's final production, Heaven or Hell, was the only flop of his career. Two decades later, he receives the old show's playbill inside a casket that arrives on his doorstep. Thus kicks off The Body in the Casket, the 24th book in Katherine Hall Page's "Body in" series featuring caterer and sleuth Faith Fairchild.



In an effort to figure out who's behind the threatening delivery, Max invites the production's actors to a soiree at his elegant estate in Havencrest, a fictional wealthy enclave in Massachusetts. He employs our protagonist, Faith, as a caterer, while also telling her that he suspects one guest wants to murder him.



Before the party, there's coziness of food enjoyed by Faith's family and friends. Love stories are ignited among the younger generation, while the older Ursula, a widow, is courted by a man of the old-world Boston establishment. Page, who splits her time between Maine and Massachusetts, perfectly captures the twinklings of her characters' privileged schools, houses and clothes.

The celebration brings Max's sinister actors back together. His fawning helper Ian has his own secret, while it's revealed that Max, before his Broadway celebrity, had been a mistreated child. Then one guest has an even greater personal surprise in store.

Page juggles many characters, some ferocious, while keeping comfort food appealing to read about—her trademark recipes included—as real discomfort unrolls on the pages. The well-named Faith, the mainstay in this decades-long mystery series, adds some relieving balance to the characters as a stable cook, loving mother and wife of a minister.

FROM PAGE 190: "I'll check in an hour. Do you have what you need for now?" "Yes, Mrs. Fairchild. Nice Mrs. Fairchild. Pretty Mrs. Fairchild. Too bad I'm so hungover. Besides making them, you're a tasty dish yourself." "And a very happily married one," she said as she left. ◆

Traveler's Checks

The Reykjavik City Card is a bargain—the one-, two- or three-day pass includes access to public pools, the national gallery and museum, restaurant discounts and more.

Most Icelandair hotel and flight packages include spa entry to avoid resort fees at accommodations like Natura.

ICE, ICE BABY: Chill out in Iceland at one of its many spas.

RUGGED RELAXATION

ICELAND OFFERS MUCH MORE THAN ADVENTURE

THERE ARE NOT TOO MANY PLACES WHERE you'd need a knit cap and fur-trimmed coat for a lifeguard post—but Iceland is unlike most places, and that's much of its charm.

Surrounded by volcanic landscapes that are primordial and beautiful, the juxtaposition of rugged extremes and restful relaxation at spas like the Blue Lagoon is the essence of a getaway. Sure, there is plenty of adventure to be had, including ice cave treks or traversing the rocky countryside terrain aboard an all-terrain vehicle, but sometimes the thrills come from the chill of having half your body submerged in a steamy bath and laughing as others race from subzero temperatures to dunk their own trunk into a blissfully steaming pool. Add in a drink or two from the Blue Lagoon's swim-up bar, a spa treatment and lunch at Lava—its restaurant overlooking the hijinks of the bathing area—and you could easily spend your whole day there. And you'll eventually be able to spend all night as well with its soon-to-open adjoining Retreat resort, which will be Iceland's first five-star hotel.

New capacity limits at the Blue Lagoon mean you should reserve your spot in advance, but also that there's less of a spring break vibe and more of an emphasis on pristine hot springs than ever. But if you get shut out of one of the biggest tourist draws in the country, it's a good reason to discover spas like the newly renovated Fontana, whose series of interconnected lakeside baths and steam rooms offer a "course" of mini spa experiences featuring hot and cold dips. For courses and dips of another kind, the dining here, with a smorgasbord of fresh vegetables, fruits and locally caught fish, is superb. Don't miss out on the rye bread, which is cooked in hot black sand in the "geothermal bakery."

Fontana's daytime tours include the chance to see the loaves being plucked from the ground as part of a Golden Circle adventure that also includes the iconic Gullfoss waterfall and Geysir Park (Strokkur Geyser erupts every few minutes, so get your camera ready). Or, if you're looking to view the stars, Reykjavik Excursions' Warm Baths and Cool Lights tour showcases Fontana at twilight before a late-night hunt of the elusive northern lights. While there's no guarantee you'll see the natural phenomenon, admiring the pony-dotted countryside while you're enraptured by your local guide's commentary makes for an unforgettable experience.

Any late evening during a vacation should afford an opportunity to sleep in, and Natura hotel is a sublime spot to do so. The property is about a 20-minute walk from Reykjavik's center, but what it lacks in proximity it makes up for in pampering with an on-site spa worth spending a few hours at. There's also an elaborate morning spread included in standard room rates, which can save quite a few dollars in an island country with food costs that seem astronomical to an American.

Fill up before heading out for a day's adventures in the capital—but perhaps not too much if you want to enjoy Iceland's national snack: the hot dog made with mostly Icelandic lamb and a bit of beef and pork, with a delightful casing that snaps when bitten. Add on two kinds of onions—raw and crispy—and you're not exactly talking date food at Baejarins Beztu Pylsur, but you've sure saved a lot of money at just about $3 a pop. Patties, too, are locally sourced and Hamburger Factory and Hamburger Joint both offer affordable and tasty options. Elsewhere, health nuts can enjoy a smoothie and clean their clothes at the same time at Laundromat Cafe; or if you want a more upscale option, try a bit of everything with an Icelandic tasting menu at Tapas Barinn, featuring Icelandic arctic char, minke whale, smoked puffin and lamb with beer-butterscotch sauce.

Hit up happy hour to grab locally made brews, with crafts like Reykjavik-made Borg half-off at many places until about 6 pm. Or sip Einstök's Icelandic White Ale, a coriander-tinged white wheat beer brewed just a bit north in Akureyri. You can even take a quick puddle-jumper north to visit Iceland's second-largest city for yourself. But don't worry if you don't—by the end of just a few short days in Iceland, you'll already be planning a return adventure.

TAPAS OF THE TOWN

MADERA 83 BRINGS SPANISH SIZZLE TO CHARLESTOWN

IT MUST BE BRUTAL TO WALK AWAY FROM A restaurant concept that succeeded for more than 15 years, but that's what owner Samad Naamad did this past summer with Tangierino, his Moroccan eatery in Charlestown. Sensing shifting neighborhood tastes, he hired chef Matthew Leddy (ex-Townsman) and tasked him with reinventing the location as a Spanish joint. The result is Madera 83, which replaces Tangierino's romantic North African rooms with a cozy, plush-looking taberna featuring tufted red leather banquettes, gleaming polished-wood walls and a longish menu of fairly traditional Spanish small plates.

A classic kickoff is a plate of jamon serrano ($9), the thirst-inducing, salty, dry-cured Spanish ham, which pairs nicely with small cheese servings such as garroxta ($7), a mild aged goat cheese, or a wedge of yaldeón ($7), an intense Spanish blue. Aceitunas alinadas ($5), warmed-up, herb-dashed olives, and pimientos de padrón ($8), grill-kissed hot green peppers sprinkled with grated cured egg yolk, help set the table for a small plates feast.

Pan con tomate ($7), grilled rustic bread topped with raw tomato pulp and sea salt, loses some traditional zing by subbing roasted garlic for raw. Croquetas, fried spheres of thick béchamel with savory admixtures, boast similar subtle tweaks to canon with better results: creamy, briny croquetas de bacalao ($10) get an aioli drizzle and a topping of marinated fennel, while croquetas de setas ($9) inspire second orders with their gorgeous, earthy pockets of minced mushrooms squiggled with spicy harissa aioli and bright piquillo relish. Patatas bravas ($8), crisp-fried fingerling potatoes, also get a capsicum hit of smoked tomato aioli and thin-sliced pickled chilies.

Cold vegetable plates are a bumpier course. Ensalada de manzana ($10) is a sweet/tart apple salad punched up with frisee, sumac and blue cheese, while ensalada de tomate ($11) presents pretty, great-for-December heirloom tomato wedges with marinated fennel and the concentrated acerbicness of black olives. But escalivada catalana ($9), a stew of eggplant, onions and tomatoes sprinkled with pine nuts and served with grilled baguette, has the odd, off flavor of nearly raw tomato sauce. Meanwhile, alcachofas asadas ($10), a generous arrangement of roasted marinated artichokes dotted with sherry labneh, suffers from straight-from-the-fridge coldness that mutes its flavor, though it improves when allowed to warm up at the table.

Hot dishes are more consistent, starting with the super-simple coles de bruselas ($8). Brussels sprouts are cooked to just the right char and crispness in olive oil and sprinkled with sea salt and smoky pimentón. Sardinas a la parrilla ($7) is one perfect, plump, whole grilled sardine with a sweet/salty garnish of raisins and capers. Mejillones ($11) is a nice mess of Maine mussels neatly simmered in a broth of vermouth and garlic with a floating pimentón-aioli crouton. You'll want extra bread ($1 for a few slices) to sop up that wonderful broth. Gambas al ajillo ($13) is another simple seafood charmer of griddled shrimp in a shallow puddle of white wine, sherry, garlic, chilies and herbs. But pulpo a la plancha ($14) disappoints despite a fine stew of tomatoes, onion, confit eggplant and fried garlic, thanks to the unpleasant texture of the possibly previously frozen octopus, with its thin, tough rind and mushy interior. Pollo al chillindrón ($13) is an unconditional crowd-pleaser, its long braise of chicken legs in tomatoes, chickpeas and chorizo yielding another sensational gravy (again, get more bread). Costillas de cordero asadas ($15) are delectably crisp-roasted, if rather fatty, small lamb ribs helped by the yin yang of sherry glaze and mint-pistachio relish. Albondigas con membrillo ($10), tender pork meatballs with a neatly crisp exterior, get a novel sweet note from a quince paste-based glaze.

Larger plates include paella a la madera ($26), which benefits from an insistent saffron aroma and goodly meat/seafood mix, but the lack of a crunchy socorro crust results in some dull textural uniformity. Pescado a la parrilla ($25) left us with no such reservations: It's a perfectly done, fileted-in-the-kitchen, grilled whole fish (the delicious, underused local species porgy one night), topped with a vibrant, cilantro-redolent salsa verde and a lot of nifty pan-crisped potatoes.

The short list of desserts has its adventures, too, like a flourless chocolate cake ($8) with whipped cream that was promoted as molten but cooked through; a terrific, not overly sweetened almond-walnut baklava ($8); and a winning arroz con leche ($11) that takes crème brulee, punches it up with Iberian spices, and thickens it with the same short, fat Calasparra rice used in the paella.

The bar features some specialty and Spanish cocktails ($10-$12), including the cute Rememberillo ($11), a sort of bourbon swizzle decorated with a ruby chunk of membrillo (quince paste). There are de rigueur white and red sangrias ($9/glass, $36/pitcher) plus a list of nearly 20 draft and packaged beers ($5-$16). The wine list includes 67 bottles—a third of them available by the glass ($9-$14)—including 50 reds, leaning to Spain and California (most under $53). We loved the 2015 La Cartuja ($46), a velvety garnacha/cariñena blend from Priorat, and a Portuguese charmer in 2015 Aplanta ($48), a bright, fruity aragonez/alicante blend from Alentejo. A list this versatile, fairly priced and food-friendly is a huge asset to a tapeo, though some staffers could use a refresher on the basics of wine service.

With its soft lighting and flowing drinks, this little neighborhood spot seems guaranteed to launch a few thousand successful first dates. Naamad took a leap and a gamble with this reinvention, and Madera 83 has rewarded his daring by getting most of the venerable Spanish tavern formula comfortingly right.

Q: I'D LIKE TO TRY PLUMPING UP MY LIPS WITH FILLER BUT I DON'T WANT DUCK LIPS!

A: I understand; we have all seen pictures of celebrities with freakishly big lips. The key is to exercise restraint and to be conservative! Lip injections should look totally natural. Start with just a little; you can always add more.

Folks in their 20s and 30s use filler to make their lips more sensuous and to add a little pouf. People of all ages use lip fillers to enhance and add definition to either the upper lip, lower lip, or both.

Lip fillers are extremely safe. They are composed of hyaluronic acid, a clear gel that is soft and pliable. Lip injections actually don't hurt due to the fact that lidocaine, a numbing agent, is mixed into the syringe. The most popular brands are Restylane and Juvederm; there is now a new filler, Juvederm Vobella, that will last a full year.

NEAR-DEATH STAR

THE ELEGANTLY MADE STAR WARS: THE LAST JEDI LACKS GRAVITY

"THIS IS NOT GOING TO GO THE WAY YOU think," bellows Luke Skywalker. He's not wrong.

Mark Hamill's beloved character finally makes a substantial return to a galaxy far, far away in writer/director Rian Johnson's Star Wars: The Last Jedi, coming after his brief, silent cameo during the literal cliffhanger that ended J.J. Abrams' Star Wars: The Force Awakens. That 2015 installment may have been billed as the Episode VII of the chronology-shuffling, space-faring epic, but beat-for-beat, Abrams' first film of a new trilogy was an overly familiar, thinly veiled rehash of series creator George Lucas' original Star Wars from 1977. Nevertheless, as a piece of nostalgia-driven pop art, it served as a hugely satisfying return to a universe that had laid dormant since 2005, when Lucas released the final movie of his much maligned prequel trilogy.

Thankfully, Abrams and writer Lawrence Kasdan (The Empire Strikes Back and Return of the Jedi) managed to cook up a refreshingly diverse cast of younger characters to pick up the mantle from their revered (and sometimes reviled) elders. There's Finn (John Boyega), a Stormtrooper who flees the Empire-like First Order when he develops a conscience; sand-dwelling scavenger Rey (Daisy Ridley), a "nobody" who discovers that the all-powerful (now more than ever) Force is strong within her; and fellow Force-wielder Kylo Ren (Adam Driver), a black-clad, mask-wearing worshipper of Darth Vader who's revealed to be the Sith Lord's grandson, and the tortured, misguided offspring of Han Solo and Carrie Fisher's Princess (now General) Leia.

Despite Kylo Ren's actions in The Force Awakens, Leia still refuses to believe that there's no good left within her son—who's been twisted under the gnarled thumbs of his disfigured master, the First Order's mysterious Supreme Leader Snoke (Planet of the Apes veteran Andy Serkis, in another of his indelible, computer-rendered feats of performance capture)—which echoes Luke's unwavering faith in the villainous Vader in Return of the Jedi.

This newfound humor would feel right at home in a Star Wars-themed episode of Adult Swim's Robot Chicken.

How to reconcile that Luke Skywalker with the one Johnson has painted here, then? The sole writer and director of The Last Jedi, the acclaimed auteur (known for the high school-set noir Brick and time-travel thriller Looper) has given us a Luke at odds with the wholesome, blue milk-drinking hero we remember, the farm boy who dreamed of adventure—and found it. Instead, Johnson reimagines Luke as a bitter old hermit, hung up on failures that have driven him into exile at the oldest Jedi Temple on the watery planet Ahch-To, "the most unfindable place in the galaxy."

Resuming exactly where The Force Awakens left off, Episode VIII finds Rey confronting Luke, offering him the lightsaber he lost (along with the hand that had clutched it) when he fatefully dueled his father in The Empire Strikes Back, the episode this film most resembles. The entire sequence continually subverts expectations as Luke's reaction is shocking—and shockingly played for laughs.

This newfound embrace of broad humor would feel right at home in a Star Wars-themed episode of Adult Swim's Robot Chicken, but here the gags that extend throughout the picture's needlessly long running time only dilute the drama, as does the crosscutting between at least three concurrent stories that keep most of the performers—new and old—separated once again. An extended diversion to a casino is one of numerous narrative threads that accomplish little during the 152-minute running time.

All the while, a tiny armada of retreating Resistance rebels remains comically just out of reach of the First Order's much larger, more heavily armed vessels, producing a slow-moving, filmlong chase that's as drawn out as the televised pursuit of O.J. Simpson in a Ford Bronco—if it had been set to music by John Williams, whose memorable themes are inseparable from Star Wars. Sadly, the 85-year-old composer's best work is behind him.

Here's hoping the same won't be said about Johnson. Obviously pleased with this film, Disney tapped the 44-year-old to spearhead a fourth Star Wars trilogy that will launch after Abrams helms Episode IX. Johnson is a superb stylist with a great eye (The Last Jedi's elegant designs and compositions are among the series' best), but his bold choices here, including a willful disregard for satisfying answers to questions posed in The Force Awakens, left this longtime fan feeling as conflicted as Kylo Ren. ◆

THE EDGE OF SEVENTEEN

MY PICKS FOR TOP ALBUMS AND SONGS OF 2017

ALBUMS OF THE YEAR

KENDRICK LAMAR DAMN. (Aftermath/Interscope) Hip-hop's undisputable new king bounces from the jazz-funk density of 2015's To Pimp a Butterfly to stripped-back beats and atmospheres, only to dazzle on another level. Cameos by Rihanna and U2 don't distract from the rapper's pointed flow and his morph into R&B/pop sonics.

LCD SOUNDSYSTEM American Dream (Columbia) Forgive the false farewell of their supposed swan song in 2011 at Madison Square Garden. A five-year hiatus has yielded this recharged gem of dark, percussive dance-rock, nodding to New York predecessors like Talking Heads.

BIG THIEF Capacity (Saddle Creek) Nearly speaking in tongues, Adrianne Lenker channels music as intimate art, weaving ghostly sketches through her band's impressionistic folk-rock like gorgeous, vulnerable secrets in a dream state.

ST. VINCENT MASSEDUCTION (Loma Vista) After a tabloid-wrung romance, Annie Clark takes charge with artistic vengeance, balancing cool calculation and a more personal peek into her world, parsing identity, seduction, drugs and consumerism. Lorde and Taylor Swift producer Jack Antonoff of Bleachers fame boosts digital programming, but Clark still rips a rapier-sharp guitar to buttress her vocal tour-de-force in this hall of mirrors.

FATHER JOHN MISTY Pure Comedy (Sub Pop) Folk musician Josh Tillman's misanthropic alter-ego—a '70s-styled balladeer wallowing in the ironies of today's cultural terrain—only grows deeper with this album's clever tidbits of subject and scope. Love the dying man who "checks his newsfeed to see what he's about to miss."

SZA Ctrl (Top Dawg/RCA) Long delayed and worth the wait, this full-grown debut reveals a young alt-R&B siren in clear control of her sound and sexuality, tackling self-doubt and tricky relationships with cheeky, chameleonic vocal dexterity.

JULIEN BAKER Turn Out the Lights (Matador) This album is a cry in the dark, released in the wake of love, loneliness and mental illness. "I know it's not gonna turn out all right, but I have to believe that it is," Baker sings, her pain and hope ringing over the cushioning reverb of her piano and electric guitar-like mantras.

JASON ISBELL AND THE 400 UNIT The Nashville Sound (Southeastern) It's all in the details for a great songwriter whose sobriety doesn't mean he avoids characters flirting with alcohol and drugs any more than current socio-political biases. He's got a rural-born affection for music that's come to straddle country, folk and rock.

PRIESTS Nothing Feels Natural (Sister Polygon) Raw and expansive in its sweep, this full-length debut from the D.C. post-punk quartet echoes past spectral pioneers from Sonic Youth to Sleater-Kinney while focusing its wrath in the present.

COURTNEY BARNETT AND KURT VILE Lotta Sea Lice (Matador) This sublime, low-key collaboration has two of indie-rock's most idiosyncratic voices trading drawls at a leisurely pace like a jam session over intercontinental breakfast.

SONGS

"Green Light," Lorde (Universal) Spinning in delirium like a night gone wild, this hit is the grandest of a few Kate Bush-ish strokes on sophomore outing Melodrama.

"Feel It Still," Portugal. The Man (Atlantic) These Northwest indie-rockers crack the best soul-pop crossover hit since Gnarls Barkley.

"Big Fish," Vince Staples (Def Jam) A rapper on the edge and ready to dive forward delivers this futuristic banger.

"Dum Surfer," King Krule (XL/True Panther Sounds) The English producer rides a percolating dark wave that's both hazy and infectious.

"To Live and Die in New England," Terence Ryan (3QTR/LVSND) This song is a resonant postcard to working-class life from a Pembroke singer/producer who struck gold in acoustic simplicity. ◆

PUPPY LOVE

MAN'S BEST FRIEND IS A STAR IN HIS OWN RIGHT

LAST SPRING, WE HAD TO PUT OUR 13-year-old dog to sleep. (Hilarious column, Ez! Tell us more!) I never wrote about that, because I'd rather not revisit that experience, except to point out that it's really weird that they give you a mold of your dog's paw print afterward. So someone's job on that day included smooshing a dead dog's paw in some clay. Then they're like, "Here, take this incredibly morbid trinket that you can look at if you ever want to wallow in this horrible experience!" I think it's supposed to prompt memories from before that actual day, but I'm quite literal.

We spent the summer as a one-dog household with our dimwitted lab-basset mix, Dino, who seemed to barely register his new status as sole canine. We expected him to be sad, but if anything his reaction seemed to be, "Hey, wasn't there another dog around here? I feel like there was." After a few months of single-dog life, I started to notice my wife, Heather, furtively looking at Petfinder listings. Not long after that, we were bringing home a 9-week-old mutt who was dropped off with his three siblings at a kill shelter. Now, I'm not pointing that out to say that I'm a better person than someone who buys a purebred dog. I would never say that. I'm writing it.

Out of the four-puppy litter, three of the dogs had blue eyes, and blue-eyed dogs kind of freak me out. I understand that if I died alone with a dog in the room, eventually the dog would eat me, but I feel like a blue-eyed dog would do it sooner. So we chose Bing, the one puppy with brown eyes. He's extremely lovable, and I can just tell from his cute little nose and his floppy ears and his sweet brown eyes that he'd wait a respectable amount of time to plunge his bloody jaws into my corpse.

Our first priority was to change his name. As with any important decision, I asked myself, "What would Gwyneth Paltrow do?" so I could do the opposite. Since I'm pretty sure Gwyneth would name her dog Quinoa, we went with Gary, which is the opposite of Quinoa.

The name decision wasn't easy. I was also partial to Fred or Frank, but Gary is what stuck. It is, at least, the kind of name that takes some of the sting out of bad behavior. Like when one of the kids walked into the kitchen and announced, "Gary pooped in the playroom!" that was empirically funnier than if he'd said, "Mittens pooped in the playroom." Frickin' Gary. Come on, man.

We're not sure what breed Gary is, but he looks like a border collie. Border collies are reputedly smart, so Gary could be a good counterpoint to Dino. I tend to anthropomorphize dogs, but Dino stubbornly resists the projection of human qualities. When you're walking him through a field and you start thinking that maybe he's feeling optimistic or grateful or displaying some semblance of emotional intelligence, he'll abruptly stop to lick his wiener and then eat a pile of deer poop. Gary has already learned to ring a bell on the door when he wants to go out. Dino once ate an entire bottle of Advil, and we had to make him drink hydrogen peroxide to throw it up.

Whatever Gary is, he's at a stage where he's 100-percent cute. Going out in public with a puppy is probably the closest most of us will get to the experience of mega-celebrity. You can't walk a block without stopping multiple times to indulge autograph requests, by which I mean puppy-petting requests. Gary is fine with this for a while, but eventually he gets tired of the petting and starts casually biting whatever hand reaches his way, exercising his razor sharp puppy teeth. You know what they say: Don't meet your heroes.

Since I'm pretty sure Gwyneth would name her dog Quinoa, we went with Gary.

As you'd expect, there are some challenges—particularly at about 3 am, when Gary wants to party, ripping mournful little ear-piercing howls and pawing at the door to his crate. My strategy is to pull a pillow over my head and ignore him. But one night he persisted long enough that Heather abruptly leapt across the bed and yelled, "Gary! Enough!" with such conviction that he shut up. I give him credit: He knew he stepped over the line and he backed off. Still, Heather's sudden rage-pounce caused me to have a nice little fight-or-flight adrenaline rush that stayed with me until the alarm went off at 6:15 am. And one thing nobody wants to hear about is how you're tired because the super-adorable puppy that you consciously decided to acquire woke you up too early. It's like complaining about how expensive it is to heat the infinity pool at your beach house. There's not a lot of sympathy.

And I don't expect any. Like my tattoo says, no regerts. Except maybe on the name. I'm not sure he's a Gary. He already knows how to sit, he rings the bell to go out and he's basically housebroken. I picture a Gary being a more rambunctious. This guy is really sensible. I hate to admit it, but he's acting like a Quinoa. ◆

Soroff On / Austin Stowell

BATTLE ROYALE

THE ACTOR CHATS ABOUT TOM HANKS' ADVICE, HIS STAR WARS AUDITION AND BEACHES ON THE VINEYARD

ACTOR AUSTIN STOWELL, 33, WAS BORN AND RAISED in Connecticut and spent many summers on Martha's Vineyard. After graduating from the University of Connecticut, he moved to Los Angeles, where he landed his first leading role as Jesse in The Secret Life of the American Teenager. Since then, Stowell has appeared in Dolphin Tale, Dolphin Tale 2, Love and Honor, and the Oscar-nominated films Whiplash and Bridge of Spies. More recently, he played Billie Jean King's husband in Battle of the Sexes, and he stars opposite Chris Hemsworth in 12 Strong, which will be released in January.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Before Battle of the Sexes, did you even know who Billie Jean King was?
AUSTIN STOWELL: I probably could have picked her out in a lineup. Growing up, I was one of those kids who would watch Sports Center while I ate a bowl of Wheaties. We were very into all things sports in my house, including tennis.

Are you a tennis player? I'm OK. I can kinda pick up any sport pretty easily. But I don't actively seek out tennis matches.

Who's better-looking, Liam or Chris Hemsworth? Pass. That question's got all kinds of trouble written on it.

Finest actor you've ever worked with? That's tough, because anyone I don't mention is gonna come back and get me. But probably because I got to see the most of his process, I'll say Tom Hanks. He's pretty spectacular. I really got to watch and observe him, and there's something just so natural about him. I spent a bunch of time with him off set. I asked him for his advice, and his answer was, "Throw deep, man. Throw deep."

Anyone you've worked with who intimidated you? Well, Damien Chazelle didn't speak to me for a week on the set of Whiplash. It wasn't so much intimidating as a total mind-fuck. You're sitting there, thinking, "The director will not talk to me. What the fuck?" Y'know, we're actors. We need to be praised constantly. If we don't hear applause after every single take, we question ourselves. So finally, I went up to him and said, "Are you getting everything you need?" And he was like, "Yeah, sure. What's up?" I said, "You haven't said a word to me except 'Action!' and 'Cut!'" And he was like, "Oh, geez, I'm so sorry." In retrospect, it's so easy to see that he was so engrossed in the aesthetic of the shot, he was just letting us do our thing. He said, "You're great. Everybody's great. Miles, you're great. J.K., you're great. Anybody else?"

Role you wanted but didn't get? Well, I tested for Star Wars, and I was all geared up, full hair, makeup and costume. I did the test with J.J. Abrams at Pinewood Studios in London, reading with John Boyega. And the second I got back to L.A., I was on the phone with my agent. He said, "I'm gonna do this like a Band-Aid. You didn't get it." A role like that can change your life. It's a game changer. Plus, I've always been a fan of the franchise. It's so iconic. And I still very much want to work with J.J. Abrams.

Do you ultimately want to direct? I do. I want to produce, too. You get tired of having somebody else tell you what to do all the time, and being at the whim of somebody else's creative journey. You have to do things as an actor, unless you're rich, that aren't necessarily to your liking. You have to take jobs, and at the beginning of your career, you have to do whatever you have to in order to move forward. Nobody signs up to be the fourth male on the call sheet. And the directors in Hollywood aren't always telling the stories you want to tell, so at some point, I do want to do my own thing.

"I will say that auditions are the most asinine way to get the best actor for the job. The casting process makes no sense."

TV show you binge-watch? The Office. I watch it every night before I go to bed. It puts me in a good mood. There's something very calming about it. That show walks a fine line between being completely slapstick and an accurate presentation of our everyday lives.

Thing you miss most about New England? The sports. The fall.

Best beach on Martha's Vineyard? South Beach, right fork, for sure. Although a very close second is Great Rock.

Dream role? Mickey Mantle. I think he would have been the greatest baseball player of all time if he hadn't gotten injured. And looking at the man and not the player, I've become fascinated and obsessed with his life. I'd love to get that story made and portray him.

Do you like yourself better with or without a beard? Doesn't matter to me, but I will say with, because I don't shave when I don't have to. That's an old actor's trick. I remember doing a show my freshman year at UConn, and this guy said to me, "Between every project, grow all your hair, because it's easier to take off than it is to put on." So I adopted that. And it worked out for me.

That's how I got the role in 12 Strong. They were like, "You already look the part!"

Greatest lengths you've ever gone to for a role? I put myself in the hospital for Bridge of Spies. I was running as far as I could run. It was not uncommon for me to be running 18 miles on a treadmill every day because I was trying to look like a guy who had been imprisoned for years. So, on set one day, my left leg just blew up. I'd done significant nerve damage on my lower left leg.

Biggest lie on your acting resume? Well, it wasn't a lie, but my very first job in L.A., I was cast in a music video and my agent said, "There are motorcycles involved, but you don't have to ride one." I arrive at this abandoned mall and they say, "Here's your motorcycle." I had no idea how to ride one, and I got this guy to show me really quickly. I was like, "I got this." Then they started wetting down the marble floor. And they say, "How about we put a girl on the back of the bike?" We do the first take, and the guy in front of me wipes out. I barely miss his bike, and they said, "We got it." I totally got away with it. For Whiplash, I booked the role, and when I arrived on set, Damien [Chazelle] was amazed that I didn't know how to play the drums. He said, "Your agent said you can play." He called my agent, who said, "No, no, no. I said he's musically inclined." Damien was like, "I'm going to give you two weeks to learn a drum roll." I was drumming on every surface, all day, for the next two weeks.

Worst audition disaster? Too many to count. But I will say that auditions are the most asinine way to get the best actor for the job. The casting process makes no sense, and when I do make my own projects at some point, I won't ever cast the way most projects are. I know I'll probably get in trouble for saying that, but I do not see how bringing a person into a blank room with one chair, when they're supposed to be in a war, is the way to find the right actor. It's an astonishingly stupid process. ◆

We might know in general terms what 2018 has in store for Boston: No flying cars yet! But we have no idea what Boston in 2100 might look like: Maybe flying cars? How about what life for a Bostonian will be like a decade from now? That gets a little murkier. So we rounded up three experts with varied experiences in four different categories—food, fashion, fitness and the performing arts—to discuss what the future might look like for Boston in 2028. You can expect plenty of bright spots and more than a few challenges. Here are the highlights of our conversations.

Sarah Hagman: We've all been hearing about the retail apocalypse. What do you think that bodes for local boutique owners?

GRETTA MONAHAN (OWNER OF GRETTA LUXE): It's a great time to be small because we can be nimble. I can move much quicker and I think personalized service has never ever, ever been more important. And I'm seeing our customers get more excited than ever. They understand why they go to Saks and they understand why they go to Neimans and why they love it, but there's a very different connection to the small business community.

Jay, after you launched Brass, you decided to open up a space for the public to try on clothes. Are e-commerce businesses going to be opening more and more studios?

JAY ADAMS (CO-FOUNDER OF BRASS CLOTHING): We would also love to be able to have a retail space in the future because our brand is so community-driven. The opportunities for people to come and meet face to face, interact with the product, interact with people from the brand that work there, that's really important to us. And I think we're going to see that really trend more that way in the next five years. Bonobos was one of the first direct-to-consumer, digitally native brands, and they showed that in order to scale and get yourself to $100 million a year in revenue, you have to be accessible. You're going to have to be in multiple places. Retail is not dead. It's just evolving. Go down to the Seaport and check out what's going on down there.

Do you think that in the future you're not going to go to a store just to shop, but that you'll be there for more than one thing?

GRETTA: Absolutely. One of the most recent events that Daniela [Corte] invited me to was a collaboration between she and Tiffany & Co. When my team looked at that, we were all wowed, because when was it ever in the time that I've been in business that a brand like Tiffany or Cartier would actually partner with a local, cherished brand that is born here in Boston? That cross-fertilization has to continue because here's the thing: Even if you are Tiffany, you can only afford to have so many stores that are marketing vehicles on every best high-rent street in the world. So the point is, when Newbury Street empties out and stores like Daniela's close and Tiffany is by itself, it's no longer a fun experience to go to Newbury Street to see all for-rent signs.

Do you know how you're going to be using consumer data in 2028?

GRETTA MONAHAN

JAY ADAMS

customer right away. We can pull data from all over. It's a matter of how and what way do we want to use that data. It can be like, "Oh, we're seeing a lot of women are super excited about the brand in Seattle. We're going to do a pop-up in Seattle. We're going to locate that pop-up in a neighborhood where we actually know a lot of our customers live." But I still think that Stitch Fix and some of these personalization stylist services, as much as they say that they're doing something personal, it's really an algorithm. In the end there's a real lack of authenticity.

DANIELA CORTE (DESIGNER): I'm part of the Fashion Council. I went to New York and had a meeting with Lauren Santo Domingo about [Moda Operandi's] virtual closet. What she was saying is, "We have all of the data from our customers of what they bought. Maybe a skirt that they bought three years ago would actually be perfectly paired with a new top from 2018." So it's kind of giving that advice, influencing your customer. It's not only about shopping, it's about making the woman's wardrobe easier. That's where I think there's a big advantage of online, but you still need to touch it. I'm a textile snob, as I always say.

Project Runway had models of every shape and size this season. Do you see that becoming a wider trend?

DANIELA: Look at what Sports Illustrated has done. I have gotten so many requests of: This is a plus-size model, she's a size 12 and we're shooting her half-naked basically, because the bikinis are small. You have to make them extra small for Sports Illustrated, but they're plus models. And I think that's the message they want to project. And for the first time they did like a whole spread of "OK, we have our regular standard model and then we have four, five plus-size models shot." And that's the whole idea of aging gracefully. I think, you know, women that take care of themselves in their 60s or 70s can be shot with their daughters.

Do you think that the public's increasing desire to want to know where their clothes are coming from is going to affect other brands that haven't been paying attention to that sort of thing?

JAY: It's one of the most polluting industries in the world, and we need to wake up and change the way in which we shop, the way in which we produce things. And it's really on the consumer to make sure that that happens and put the pressure on brands and say, "I'm interested in knowing where my stuff is made," and you know, "why should I buy 100-percent recycled polyester?" Or, "why should I buy this over this?"

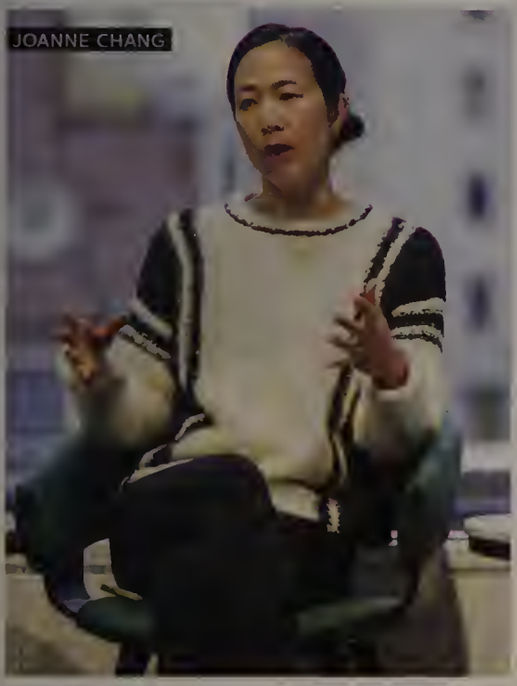
GRETTA: I think, as of late, banning fur from a European luxury house, these are first-time happenings. Fashion Week is undergoing such an amazing change where a lot of the designers are saying, "We're not going to create pollution. We're not going to do shows anymore that have so much waste connected to them. We're actually going to give you what you need digitally. You can watch the show stream. We're going to do it within our company headquarters or in a small different creative way."

JAY: Cotton takes up a huge amount of space to grow. Pesticides. There's a lot of pollution with that, unsafe work conditions. We're going to probably see more man-made fibers and synthetic fibers that are going to emerge that will still look, feel, act like all of these amazing natural fabrics, but hopefully it'll be a lot less impactful on our environment.

DANIELA: One of my best-sellers is my wax jeans and that's a man-made fabric. It's competing with the leather jeans that, you know—every woman in their wardrobe has a pair of really great leather jeans. Well, mine are a fraction of what the leather would be. You can buy four for the price of one, you can wash them in the washing machine, and it's a man-made product. So it's a win-win situation. And the fit is better. There's a lot of that going on.

Matt Martinelli: Josh, you say Fresh Truck is refocusing away from food deserts and making it more accessible in terms of price. Is that your biggest goal in the next 10 years?

JOSH TRAUTWEIN (CO-FOUNDER OF FRESH TRUCK): Yeah. It's getting more affordable, healthy foods into low-income neighborhoods. I would build on that by saying we're also looking to embed ourselves more deeply into the community health sector as we do that. That's sort of the strategy as we grow to scale. In addition to our retail model, we have what we call a food prescription called Fresh Cash that enables those stakeholders to actually invest in healthy food for their population of families by prepurchasing gift cards that families can actually use to shop on the truck. We're not the only ones doing that. I think it's a broader trend, and I think it's something that's only going to grow in the next 10 years, so we're really excited to watch that and be a part of it.



What's the biggest obstacle to putting something in farther-out neighborhoods? Would it be transportation to get enough employees, or would it be making the price structure work?

JOANNE CHANG (OWNER OF FLOUR; CHEF/CO-OWNER OF MYERS + CHANG): I would think for all of us—well maybe not for Josh because he has a truck—but transportation is such a huge issue when we think about where to put a new bakery. The first thing I think about is, "How will the staff get there?" If they can't get there easily, then it's going to be that much harder to find people. Finding people is already so difficult, and if you add that obstacle of making it hard for them to get there via public transportation, then that's one of the biggest hurdles for sure.

Do you think the city's population growth makes it more challenging to serve everyone, or is there more of a talent pool, presumably to hire restaurant workers?

DOUGLASS WILLIAMS (CHEF/OWNER OF MIDA): It seems like the city wants to make strides, and hopefully we're following [up] on our promises, and the city's following up on its promises to make those strides for housing. That's my biggest wish for 2028. It's that we come through and really make some affordable housing. And knowing that having workers live close to their job is really the most important thing, if not a top-two item on the list—that I think will solve a lot.

DOUGLASS WILLIAMS

Does anyone envision that indoor farming—kind of like Freight Farms—will be the main source of food 10 years from now?

JOANNE: I guess if we can. I don't know physically speaking how many acres you'd need in Boston to do a Freight Farms-type of model to supply all of our produce. But I do think that if we can fast-forward 10 years from now, that something like that has to happen because of global warming, because of the logistical challenges and the cost of transportation. I think it's getting more and more difficult for us to access really great produce that's coming from really far away. So I do think we will have to start coming up with some different model where we get all our food.

DOUGLASS: It could be a thing in 10 years. But it taking over? Absolutely not. But the trajectory of it is what's important. So the trajectory in 10 years will be up. It won't be able to make our decisions that much different. But hopefully the trajectory is going up, so we're like, "Oh, let's support this." Support is massive, and we can really start to change that.

JOSH: I agree with that too. I don't think it's close that we could develop the infrastructure that we would need for supporting the food supply for Boston, let alone Massachusetts.

Is there a cuisine or ingredient that you're hoping or predicting might be big 10 years from now?

JOANNE: One thing that we've begun using at the bakery that's been a lot of fun is aquafaba. There's a whole Facebook group for aquafaba. Aquafaba is the cooking liquid for chickpeas, so you cook a batch of chickpeas to make hummus. You take that water and it acts like egg whites. So you can make meringue, buttercream. You can use it to make aioli, so we've used it now for a vegan Sriracha aioli. So we make hummus, and we have all this as part of the chickpea that we would just dump. Now we save it and we use it as egg whites for our almond macaroons, and there's a perfect example of a byproduct that is useful that we haven't tapped into yet. So 10 years from now, that'd be fun. Do you think bugs will be in? [They're] a good source of protein.

DOUGLASS: To even sort of digest the thought of serving bugs artfully or cleverly is a huge challenge. But that would be awesome because everyone would be walking around so beefy, just diesel. ... I know it seems like nothing that regular consumers care about, but in my bubble of life, it's about having affordable sparkling water that I don't have to try to contract a company to put in. I just want it to be cheap and there. I think that would be huge for the guests, huge for the staff and huge for health because everyone would drink that and wine, and I think that would be great. We wouldn't even need soda. I know that's weird, but that's what I think is important.

JOSH: I do have a pretty wacky friend who is growing moringa in the Caribbean, which I've heard is the next superfood. I think another trend related to ingredients is the climate impact on food. I think people are acutely aware of what it means to be eating so much meat. So I think veganism will continue to be a trend in terms of how people align their ethical values with what they eat. I don't think it's going to be a trendy sort of cultural thing, so much as an ethical decision that people are going to begin to make. It's not like people are going to stop eating meat altogether—although I think that will be a thing, which is why I think bugs will be a trend because it's hard to find protein within that diet.

By 2028, what do you want changed the most?

JOANNE: I think in 10 years, hopefully [no tipping] will become a thing and there's a little more equality between the front of the house and the back of the house. I sign the paycheck, I look at that. I see how much more the servers make versus the cooks. I get it, I'm a cook, and I see why people make that choice to be in the back of the house versus the front of the house. Sometimes it's pretty drastic, and it can be demoralizing as a business owner to know: These people who are equally great, one of them can take vacations in the Caribbean and live right in the middle of Boston, and the other one doesn't take vacations and travels from many, many miles away. And the second thing I hope for in 2028 is that by then this whole #MeToo, sexual harassment and harassment thing has become a thing in the way that we look at racism. I recognize that racism is still a thing, but you watch any old movie and you realize: "Wow, we've got a long way to go, but we've certainly come a long way." So I really hope that by then, we'll look back at us 10 years from today and say, "Wow, I can't believe that existed." And we're all looking back and saying, "Yup that was my generation, and I grew up in that and I'm so shocked." That's my hope.

JOSH: I really hope and expect for food to become a more deeply integrated part of health care and how we treat patients. It's so foundational to our health outcomes. The number-one cause of chronic pain and disability is food. People aren't eating the right stuff, and if you become overweight, it's bearing down on your body. That has the cascading impact of not being able to work, not being able to get to doctors appointments, diabetes.

JESS FRACALOSSI

EVAN ALLEN

MARIE ASPLING

Sarah Hagman: Jess, I've seen gyms saying you don't have to go to class. You can start whenever you want and just follow a screen in front of you...

JESS FRACALOSSI (FOUNDER OF THE HANDLE BAR): People ask me often, "Are you concerned about Peloton?" I've heard that Flywheel is going to start offering online classes. I think Class Pass is starting to offer online class subscriptions that you can do from home. And I guess my answer is no because people are coming here for more than just the workout. Maybe they sign up for the workout, but when they leave they realize that they just had some genuine human interaction. They've met people, they've been stimulated by others with common interests. We focus so much on community engagement—and I want to always do that—that it's just not something that those competitors, if you're going to call it that, will be able to offer because it is online and it is isolated. Why would I want to look at a screen and workout when I could be next to somebody who's sweating with me and high-five them at the end of class? That's kind of what it's all about.

Marie, we talk a lot about non-toxic ingredients and I think that's more in the public conversation. Is that going to continually be something that people are increasingly thinking about?

MARIE ASPLING (FOUNDER OF BALANS): Without a doubt. I've seen a huge shift since I started Balans seven years ago. People's awareness has definitely increased. The information is out there, and I think once you've opened that door, you can't close it. People look into things and they are more critical and want answers, which I think is great. I see a huge demand for them. I think it's only going to continue to move in that direction.

Evan, do you find that players want to know more and more information about their performance?

EVAN ALLEN (NEW ENGLAND REVOLUTION HEAD ATHLETIC TRAINER): Definitely. It's sifting through what is good and new and evidence-based versus what is the newest, latest trend. You can definitely spend a lot of time chasing around one fad to the other, so it's seeing what actually has a sound basis for incorporating into your practices. Because information is so readily available, sometimes it can be tough staying in front [of it]. Some athletes will have ideas—a different thing I had to adjust to working with the Revs was the international players. They're coming from all over the world, and they have different things that they've done that I was maybe never really exposed to. It's a challenge to stay on top of that and see what is really going to be a benefit, and balancing giving the athlete what they want versus what they need.

Google searches for self-care are up 25 percent.

MARIE: We're craving it, right? It's almost like desperation, because the way I look at it is that we are going through an epidemic of poor health. It's peaking. Physical and mental health is really up there. We're desperate to find ways to live differently because the way we've lived up to today has been very destructive and we have to find alternate ways.

So 10 years from now, you don't think we'll be so desperate?

MARIE: I'm very positive to how the world is evolving. I see it in the corporate world. They're spending more time and money toward preventive care, toward yoga and toward someone coming in and talking about nutrition. Can we go much further? Absolutely. We've only begun. There's a lot to be done and that's why I choose to do what I do, to raise these concerns and inspire. So we have a long way to go, but let's celebrate that we've come a long way. The fact that we have a million different apps to search for meditation, that's great. Twenty years ago, people struggling with mental health or anxiety and depression, they didn't have the resources we have today.

Evan, do you pay attention to other sports teams' training programs, even if it's not soccer?

EVAN: I think you have to, otherwise you might look like you don't know what you're talking about. You have to at least have an opinion on things. ESPN's not the greatest place to get an idea of what other teams are doing just because usually it's just a pretty basic overview of some of the details of what they're doing or how they're pulling it off or implementing different strategies. It can be a little challenging though, too, because if they're doing something that they think is giving them an advantage, they're not necessarily going to be the most forthcoming with it. Neither are we. That's why you don't see every team doing things exactly the same.

Have you been using data to track what services or classes are popular? Do you think that will influence you more as you go along and you have more information?

JESS: Always. I lean on that to make pricing decisions, scheduling decisions, hiring, performance, popularity of instructors. You can look at where people navigate through your site, what they're clicking on, patterns that way. I try to use the data as much as possible. We're talking with a company called Zenrez. They integrate fully with MindBody and they help with retention and recovery software for lost clients, and that previously is an area that even though the information is available, you would almost need a full-time sales person to be mining that data, creating content and outreach re-engagement campaigns on a full-time basis.

What excites you most about where you see things going in your industry in 2028?

EVAN: I think on a bigger scale, I'm excited to see soccer is starting to get a little bit more of a foothold over here, which is kind of exciting. The reason I got into athletic training was I really liked athletics. I wasn't good enough to play at a very competitive level, and I was also interested in the medical field. So being able to be part of team success or individual success, being able to keep somebody on the field and get them back to playing, or sometimes just being able to be a support and a resource in their day-to-day lives, that's why I do it. So I think the more things progress and we get better at being able to do that, that's exciting.

JESS: What I really love most about what I do is creating these environments where even somebody that just stops in for information—if everybody is doing their part and everybody that's working feels good, and the music is set just right, and the vibe is set just right—will leave feeling a little bit more positive. And I think that that's really powerful. And then all of our social media and newsletters and information and content that we send out there, I'm excited by the idea that it has a ripple effect. That it makes somebody's day a little bit brighter just by consuming that, and then they are going to go out into the world and that's going to have a ripple effect for the people that they touch. There's so much negativity out there already that I'm so excited that I get to, for the foreseeable future, combat negativity full-time.

 For full audio recordings, go to improper.com.

Matt Martinelli: What do you find most confounding about the space crunch, and how do you think it might be fixed 10 years from now?

PHAEDRA SCOTT (PLAYWRIGHT/DIRECTOR): So with the space, and in particular with rehearsal space and in some cases performance space, there has been some effort by the Boston government in order to have spaces open in nontraditional areas. But the issue with that is that it's always during work hours and when you think about smaller theater companies and when they can rehearse, it's usually post-6 pm. So it's like, yes, the space is available, but nobody can actually use it. And it's really a matter of having space available during those hours where smaller companies can actually rehearse. Honestly, smaller companies are where a lot of our really great playwrights and great actors start, and when they don't have that opportunity to rehearse because they have to feed themselves at their day job, then they move to New York. And so in terms of fixing the problem with space, I think looking at alternative venues is really essential. Like office spaces or people who know people who have contracts with any space. You can rehearse anywhere really, you just need the location.

Latrell, you have your recording studio in your basement. Is there a convenience there or would you rather have somewhere that was more accessible?

LATRELL JAMES (MUSICIAN): In the last two years, I can recall T.T. Bear's and I can remember Church Boston being places that I performed at—and those two venues are gone. We're starting to get to the point where there's not even places for us to rehearse. A place where you can actually make noise anytime is way more important [than a recording studio] because you've got to perfect your craft before you perform it, and I think that the city is disconnected with that at times.

GIL ROSE (ARTISTIC DIRECTOR OF ODYSSEY OPERA AND THE BOSTON MODERN ORCHESTRA PROJECT): In the same way that people are fighting for space, they're fighting for a piece of the funding pie that seems to be limited. That scramble for that pie has also made it more difficult for mid-sized and small organizations, where all the innovation happens and all the new creation happens, because in this town there's some very large institutions that really dominate the philanthropic field: Boston Symphony Orchestra, the MFA, hospitals, Harvard. For small companies to try to get a piece of the pie, that's like a Jedi Knight in the Death Star. You know, if Boston is going to realize all this creative energy, if people aren't going to go to New York or LA or wherever, they're going to have to solve that relationship between innovation and promoting smaller, mid-sized groups' efforts with the tradition of these huge institutions that represent a commodity to those people.

Do you think there'll be more money from performances or licensing deals?

LATRELL: Performances always pay as long as there's people to come watch. People come and people pay, they're not going to just pay for tickets. They buy merchandise, they want to invest into your brand. Albums are worth nothing at the end of the day. You can download it illegally if you want online or you can go stream it on Spotify for less than a penny. You don't really make anything unless you're tracking millions of streams. So I think aligning yourself with corporate brands is important. But I also think since we're in Boston, specifically aligning yourself with tech companies and just building your alliances there.... Brands need somebody to be the face of their brands. Hopefully local tech companies do that and see that there's money in there for both sides.

GIL: There's no long history with the concept of charitable donations [in tech]. So when you meet them, they're very interested in what you do and they think your product's interesting, or your mission is interesting, but they want to teach you how to organize your loading dock, not participate in philanthropy in the old sense of philanthropy.

Where do you see the arts scene 10 years from now in terms of its importance in bringing issues to light?

PHAEDRA: I think in Boston, in particular, you just have to have more people of color. We have to have more women in these theaters. So many theater companies here are run by white men, and that really limits the programming options. And right now, in the national landscape of theater, there are more artistic director positions open since the 1960s, which is the start of the regional theater movement. And so far, two of those 47 positions have already been filled by white men. We're at the point of change, where we either get to be like, "Hey, we actually want theater to be inclusive, literally inclusive." Or, "We're going to stick with our white supremacist, patriarchal theater and be OK with that." And so I'm really anxious about the future in terms of theater because two positions have already been filled by white guys. And I'm just really nervous when you think about ticket sales. Sixty percent of ticket buyers are women, yet there's like 20 artistic directors in the whole country that are women and none that are women of color. And so when you look at the statistics, really, a lot of change has to happen in a medium that prides itself on being forward and diverse and inclusive.

LATRELL JAMES

PHAEDRA SCOTT

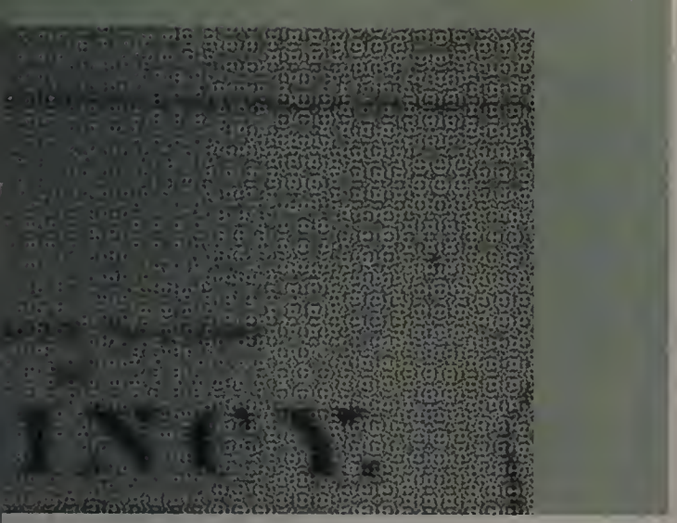
GIL ROSE

GIL: I do worry that sometimes in this city in particular, there's a wedge between the old and the new. We were talking before that in a city that really sees tradition as a commodity, and the money that follows it sees it as a commodity, that it takes bravery to advocate for the future. I hope that the support or mechanisms—whether they be facilities or philanthropic money or corporate money or whatever—get behind a change about innovation and advancement of our art forms as opposed to preservation. And that will determine a lot with what kind of city we become, because although we call ourselves the Athens of America, in many ways Boston artistically is getting its clocked cleaned by places in California and New York and even places like Charlotte, North Carolina. There are places that are thinking forward, and I think it has a lot to do with this mindset of Boston being a pristine, museum-type environment.

Ten years from now, is there something that you're most excited to possibly have seen occur or that you think might occur within your industry?

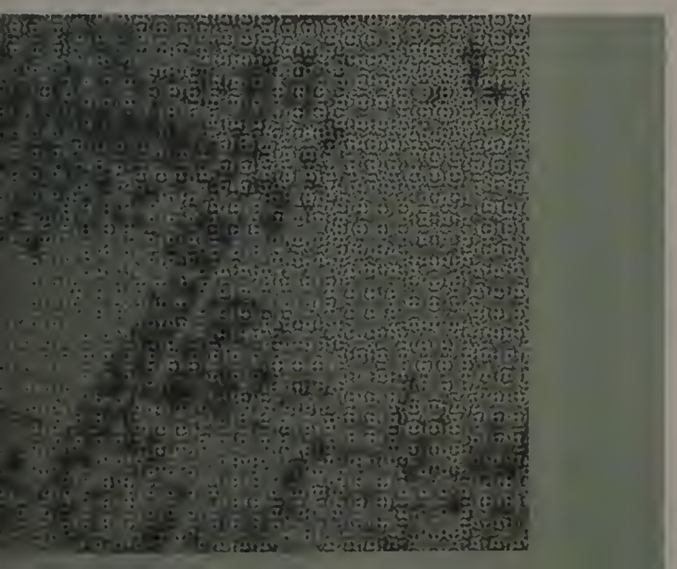
PHAEDRA: The Boston project by SpeakEasy Stage, which I'm a part of that, they're commissioning plays about the city of Boston. I think for the longest time, playwrights in particular, even if they lived in Boston, always set their plays in New York. And so it's great that we actually get to talk about this city.

LATRELL: That there's actually an underground hip-hop community that really supports each other and is propelling each other to get to the next platform. For example, it's how Cousin Stizz got his way up. There is actually a community here, but there's not a lot of support for those communities. A lot of his upcoming came from basement parties, illegal basement apartments because people wanted to be there. I was in one of those basements, and it's 300 people wall-to-wall, sweaty, no ventilation, because there's actually something there. But we don't have the places that support it. Hopefully, we do get those things in 10 years. Smaller venues would be the best thing that we can ever get. Two hundred capacity or 150, because that's how you grow your core audience and that's how you groom the artists of the future. And that's how you groom a Lollapalooza here.



GIL: When I think about 10 years from now, I think it could change with the right kind of leadership that centralizes thinking about how we coordinate all this wonderful stuff so that it's not eating each other. At the same time, I don't actually care about that because I feel like the responsibility of all of these organizations is to keep producing art with integrity and interest.

METRO MAKEOVER



EXPLORING QUINCY'S REBIRTH ON A CULINARY TOUR

BY EZRA DYER

PHOTOGRAPHED BY HOLLY RIKE

I moved to Quincy in 2008. My wife and I outgrew our condo in Southie, so we started exploring the South Shore. Our search method could be explained as: "Take a left off 3A and see what happens." That led us to Hough's Neck, a peninsula that juts out into the harbor. The Neck, as it's called, is the self-proclaimed flounder capital of the world, even though the fish stock was decimated by pollution and overfishing by the '90s. But you could buy lobsters off the boat down at the public landing, go on waterfront walks around Nut Island and drop a mooring pretty much anywhere you wanted in the bay. And houses cost the same as a one- or two-bedroom condo in Southie. We loved it, despite the fact that the peninsula has a propensity to turn into an island on those days when Sea Street lives up to its name. There was just one main drawback: For a city of 90,000 people, Quincy didn't have much going on when it came to restaurants.

IF YOU WANTED FINE DINING DOWNTOWN, Alba—a huge Italian steakhouse—was your only choice. And Alba was an island surrounded by nail salons, massage parlors and bizarrely outdated stores. You'd park a block or two from the restaurant, and on your way in you'd walk past a vacuum cleaner repair place and a typewriter store. If you wanted to shoot a movie set in the '70s, Quincy was a great spot. In fact, my neighborhood supermarket, the IGA, was used for a scene in the Cameron Diaz movie The Box. That movie is set in 1976.

The place seemed primed for a resurrection, though. All these people, great beaches and coastline, a few stops from South Station on the Red Line: Why isn't there more investment in this place? Quincy in 2008 had the feeling of potential that I imagine was there in the South End in 1995, or the Seaport in 2003. I told anybody who would listen that Quincy was the next big thing. "Yeah," my friend Dave agreed, "This will be a really cool place to live, 15 years from now." Dave lives in Weymouth, so I figured he was just jealous.

I told anybody who would listen that Quincy was the next big thing. "Yeah," my friend Dave agreed. "This will be a really cool place to live, 15 years from now." Dave lives in Weymouth, so I figured he was just jealous.

But his timeline is proving prescient, if a little bit conservative. Street-Works' controversial $1.6 billion plan to completely reinvent downtown failed to reach fruition, but it set in motion the craze of construction that's currently consuming Hancock Street. And it helped prove that the citizenry's palate ranges far beyond fried clams and lobster rolls. Alas, I didn't stick it out—I moved in 2011—so I recruited one of my friends, a Quincy native, to lead me on a tour and show me what I missed. As it turns out: a lot.

ALBA

THE POUR YARD

We meet at The Townshend, one of many Quincy Center restaurants that didn't exist when I lived in the Neck. The place is quiet ahead of a lunch rush, and we take a seat at the bar. The Townshend's owner, Devin Adams, came from Drink, and the menu looks very Boston, which is to say the menu includes food you know that's described with words you don't. I wish this place had been around in 2011. I'd have killed for a good escabeche, I'll bet. But that's on the dinner menu, so I go for a Bibb salad with the idea that I want to keep it light for my culinary crawl. It's excellent, and I'd love to sit here for a while nursing a nice saison, but we have places to go.

Namely, down the street to Fuji at West of Chestnut, a sleek Japanese place on the street level of a new luxury condo building. We slide in at the bar, and Fuji owner Jimmy Liang materializes and starts slinging the best damn sushi I've had this side of Toyko. "How's it been in here?" my friend asks. "Busy," Liang says. "I'm about to head up to New Hampshire for the weekend to take a break." Liang has his hands full these days, as the JP Fuji Group has nine other restaurants throughout the Boston area. But it started here, in Quincy. And now we're cooking wagyu beef on hot stones right in front of us and dipping it in ponzu sauce. I'm happy for Liang that he's hit this level, and happy that Quincy is a place that can support sexy $35 entrees. While we're at it, I'm happy that the walk here took us past the tombs of John Adams and John Quincy Adams, and that these two titans of democracy are no longer buried in the middle of a rotary. Yes, downtown Quincy's insane traffic pattern was improved, too. It's hard to fully describe how it was before, but it was like a pinball machine loaded with '98 Monte Carlos and elderly pedestrians.

From Fuji, we continue down Hancock to Zef Cicchetti & Raw Bar, an industrial-looking brick-and-wood space that serves Venetian small plates and seafood. Contractors are working on a set of metal stairs leading up to the roof, where owner Leo Keka is building a massive 6,000-square-foot roof deck that will top both Zef and Alba next door. Keka also owns Alba, which I'd consider the cornerstone of downtown Quincy's ongoing transformation. "When I opened Alba, 16 years ago, the only steakhouse was Outback," Keka says. "And everybody told me this was a failing location. I saw it as an opportunity."

Alba already had a modest roof deck, but Keka didn't go too crazy with it because the imminent Street-Works project was supposed to swallow the entire block. "I liked what they were planning—like Assembly Square in Somerville," Keka says. "And that's sort of what's happening now, but just bit by bit. Downtown is changing." With no Street-Works buyout in the future, Keka embarked on his own plan, buying the building next to Alba, opening Zef and designing the mega-deck. I tell Keka that it was hard to imagine any of this even when I was an Alba regular, not so long ago. "In 2001, when we opened, this area was a different place," he says. "There were a lot of pubs. And video stores. And Braintree Vacuum." I now feel a little pang of regret that I never went in there. It's a Dyson world these days.

We walk out of Zef, and I see that the entire block on the other side of Cottage Avenue is a construction zone. This is the future site of Nova Residences, a commercial building with 171 apartments and 15,000 square feet of commercial space on the ground floor. Next door, the city is building a 700-spot parking garage. Right now, it's all rubble. But things are changing so fast that Google can't even keep up—on the satellite image of downtown Quincy, Fuji at West of Chestnut appears as an empty lot, and this empty lot is currently all buildings. I'm struggling to remember what was here. Falafel King and a bunch of vape shops? I hope Falafel King found a new home, anyway. I think any urban plan should include delicious falafel.

We walk a block to Chestnut Street and stop into Italian Cafe Gelato, a mashup of a coffee shop and gelateria. I'm too full for gelato, but the coffee is excellent. Across the street, it's good to see the Fat Cat and Sully's going strong. Sully's, with its signature pink neon sign, embodies the challenge of remaking a city whole cloth. It's no big deal to lose the mediocre skanky bars, but Sully's has that unforced old-school honesty that can't be manufactured. It's supposed to be the oldest bar in Quincy, and whether that's true or not, it looks like it. It's the kind of place that might serve you a Sam Summer in January. Sully's isn't changing its game, regardless of what's happening outside.

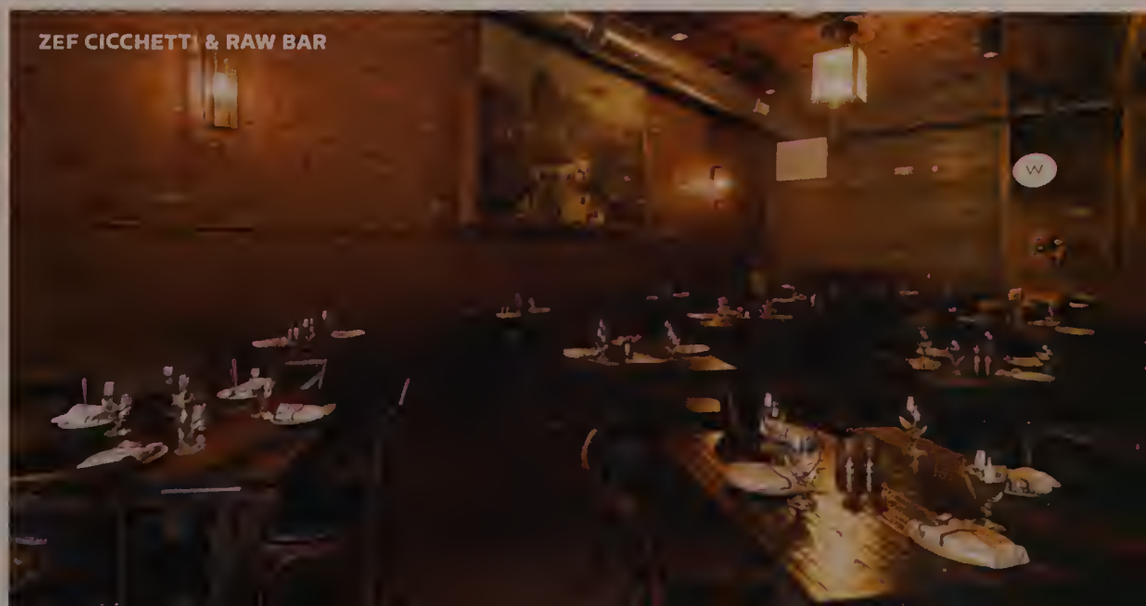
But Cagney's did. Down on Washington Street, Cagney's used to be a straightforward sports bar—TVs and Bud Light. Owner Mark DiBona kept that foundation, but added a craft beer twist and an indoor-outdoor space next door that's dubbed the Pour Yard. "We get small kegs of local beer that change all the time," DiBona says. "They're on a list called the Local 8, and that's attracted a whole new segment of customers. Some people come in and immediately gravitate toward that, to see what's new."

That's where Quincy finds itself at this moment: It's got an omakase kitchen, but also generates headlines like, "Woman pretended to be blind, robbed Friendly's employee with a knife."

We walk outside, to the Pour Yard's 50-seat patio. Over here, you can get duck tacos and they grow their own herbs to use in cocktails. In a way, this blows my mind more than the fancy new joints on Hancock Street. Because Cagney's and the Pour Yard represent Quincy adapting in real time. You want wings and light beer? You got it. But step next door, and we'll give you a salsa flight with a rosemary tequila rambler.



That's where Quincy finds itself at this moment: It's got an omakase kitchen, but also generates headlines like, "Woman pretended to be blind, robbed Friendly's employee with a knife." (May of this year, in case you're wondering.) In other words, get in while you still can! And check out the Neck. Word is, even the flounder are coming back.

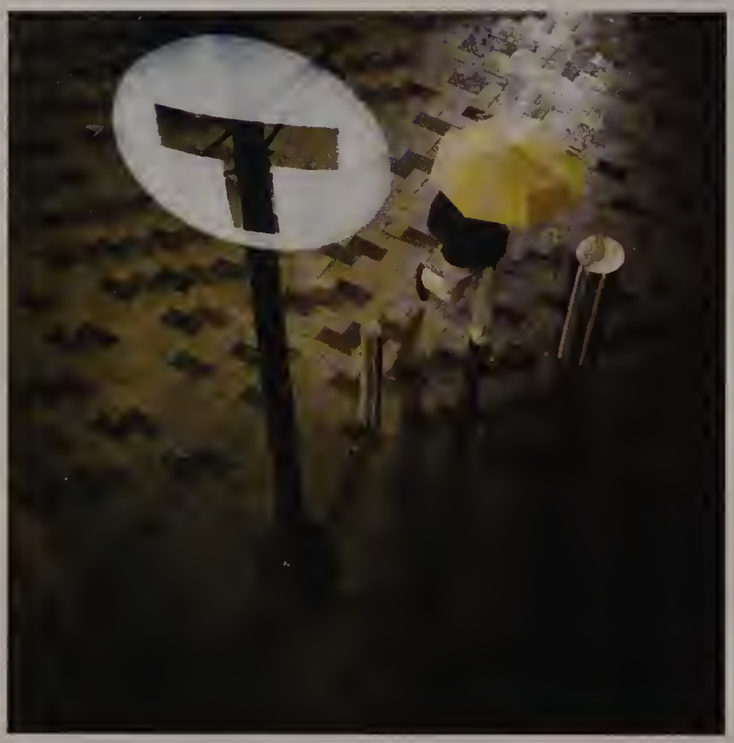
JOB: Investigator and journalist

INSTA-INTRO: I walk to work through two beautiful Boston neighborhoods—Back Bay and Beacon Hill—and in 2013 I realized it might be fun to chronicle my walking commute on Instagram. I've been posting a daily image ever since, along with the occasional photo taken while on weekend excursions out of the city.



AESTHETIC: I try to capture what it's like to walk these historic streets through the four seasons, focusing on the architecture, gardens and the people who are my neighbors. ... I only lightly edit my shots (on my phone) before uploading them to Instagram. I don't doctor my photos with Photoshop or similar apps.

EQUIPMENT: I use a little Sony a6000 camera because it's inexpensive and small enough to fit in my coat pocket but has a better lens and gives you more control over focus and exposure than a phone camera.

POSTING TIP: Not every great photographer thrives on Instagram because the app has created its own aesthetic. Photos of latte art are as popular on IG as shots of epic mountain sunrises. Since the photos are usually viewed on a small screen, simplicity and minimalism are appealing.

SHUTTERBUG TRICK: Maybe I'm old-school, but I consider photography an art, not a technology. I think you get better results learning to master elements such as composition, light and recognizing a captivating moment.

INSTA-INTRO: I would use it to discover photographers whose work I could learn from, so it was one way to fuel my own creativity. When I scroll, I want to see your artwork or process or something that is meaningful to you as a creative.

AESTHETIC: It's indoor/outdoor scenes typically in the city, and usually with a human figure or figures in the frame. Most of the time, the figures in my photographs are unrecognizable and can represent anyone. I want to create a sense of mystery in my imagery, provoking the viewer to imagine their own story

EQUIPMENT: I currently use a Canon 5D Mark III, with the EF 40mm f/2.8 Pancake lens or the 50mm L Series f/1.2 lens. I've been experimenting a bit lately with Leica equipment as well

POSTING TIP: Consistency matters on Instagram, and as an artist in general. Post images that speak to you. There will always be time to refine your style.

SHUTTERBUG TRICK: Always have your camera ready. Take it out of your bag, take that lens cap off and turn it on. ... Shoot with whatever you have. It's easy to get hung up on all the latest gear, but you can do amazing things with just a phone these days

INSTA-INTRO: I first got into Instagram when I moved to Boston and started exploring the city with my camera. I fell in love with this city through its lens.

AESTHETIC: My desire is to photograph the magical parts of this city and to capture them in a way that's uniquely my own and that I haven't seen before. I try to find a new angle or perspective on a subject that's already been shot a thousand times before. Most of my shots involve street photography, especially in the rain.

EQUIPMENT: With smartphones taking better photos than cameras, you need to use what you have. That said, I do have the Canon EF 24-70mm f/2.8L, which is my baby when I'm out shooting.

POSTING TIP: Remember that you're not posting just to post. Did you wait for the stranger to give you the perfect stride by? Is your subject making you feel something? Have you seen this photo before? One of the most photographed streets in Boston and maybe the world is Acorn Street, so if you're going to photograph it, think about how you're going to capture it and make it your own.

SHUTTERBUG TRICK: You need to constantly carry a camera or smartphone with you, so you can shoot all the time, and just go shoot. You need to shoot, shoot, and keep shooting until you find your own style and master your camera or phone.

INSTA-INTRO: I started with Instagram in sort of a banal way. I wasn't really into photography, and at first, I used the app to post photos of my everyday life—selfies, food, photos of my kids, etc. But having the platform available to me inspired me to look for material to post, and so it deepened my interest in photography.

AESTHETIC: I love the scale of the city, especially the architecture, and the order within the chaos of the streets. I experience the city as something rather epic in proportion. ... I look for strong leading lines, solitary figures, reflected patterns of light and shadow.

EQUIPMENT: I shoot with a Canon Rebel, which is not a very good or expensive piece of equipment. ... I also love to shoot with a very wide lens, mostly my 10-18mm. It makes the people on the streets appear dwarfed by the buildings around them.

POSTING TIP: I like to use captions to more deeply explain the meaning I find in an image. The best images, both on and off Instagram, somehow—magically, even—communicate a larger idea or evoke an emotion.

SHUTTERBUG TRICK: Just keep shooting and have fun ... Sometimes, this playfulness leads to some really incredible ends, and other times the result's a flop. But it's always fun—and I would hope that anyone looking to create in any medium keeps it playful and is not afraid to "fail."

INSTA-INTRO: In June of 2016, I needed some time off after graduating from MassArt, so my friend invited me on a trip to London with his sister. I wanted to bring a camera, so one of my roommates lent me his. Back then, I didn't know much about cameras, just that I had to press a button to take a photo. I remember taking the first photo I took on that trip. After pressing the shutter, it felt like I just saved a memory. Coming back home, I looked through my photos and knew I had to share them. I thought Instagram was the best platform to do it.

AESTHETIC: My favorite photos are sunrises and sunsets—also my favorite times of the day. The dramatic contrast of colors, or the sun hitting the clouds, really gives a breathtaking moment.

EQUIPMENT: I'm currently using a Nikon D7200, and the lenses I mostly use are 11-16mm Tokina f/2.8, Sigma 50mm f/1.4, and Nikkor 24-77mm f/2.8

POSTING TIP: The best posts are the ones that quickly capture a person's attention and hold it for more than a second, but that shouldn't stop someone from posting whatever they want to share. In the end, your photos and posts are yours, and the first person you should please is yourself

SHUTTERBUG TRICK: One thing I always keep in mind is that you should try to compose your shot in a way that no one else has. Don't be afraid to get low, high, or get dirty. Put the camera where it wants to be.

OUTBACK IN TOWN When Aussie-in-America comedian Jim Jefferies filmed his Netflix special at the Wilbur in 2014, he gave his outsider's take on the nation's gun control in a clip that has now gone viral (hint: he thinks it's a mess). He's perfected that raised-eyebrow, head-shaking tone of the disappointed older brother who just wants the best for you on his Comedy Central show, ending every social commentary-filled episode with his catchphrase: "Do better." Political comedy for Jefferies doesn't necessarily mean politically correct, though. His edgier bits can get quite raunchy, yet he always seems to get away with it—maybe it's the accent. Do better and come get some tough love when Jefferies stops by the Wilbur during his Unusual Punishment tour on Dec. 29-31. / Brenna Donovan

DOWNSIZING ★★★ With so many movies opening over the holidays, the latest piece of social satire from writer/director Alexander Payne and his co-writer Jim Taylor (Oscar winners for 2004's Sideways) might be easily overlooked, especially since it hasn't received the strong critical reception that greeted their earlier collaborations such as 1999's Election, 2002's About Schmidt and 2013's Nebraska. Nevertheless, I appreciated the unexpected turns this whimsical, humanistic tale takes during its second half, even if many of my colleagues were turned off by the sharp narrative detour, which emphasizes drama over the first half's humor. Matt Damon stars as Paul Safranek, an easygoing occupational therapist from Omaha who always smiles, even when correcting people's constant mispronunciation of his name. When Paul and his wife Audrey (Saturday Night Live's Kristen Wiig) are denied a mortgage for the house they'd like to buy, they discover that their limited budget will grow exponentially if they consent to shrinking themselves—physically, that is. Due to a breakthrough, irreversible process dubbed "downsizing," the Safraneks will be reduced to 5 inches tall, where they'll join one of the burgeoning communities catering to "smalls." Within the domes of these miniature paradises, money goes a lot further, allowing the middle class to become rich. Boston University grad Hong Chau (2014's Inherent Vice) is a standout as Ngoc Lan Tran, a handicapped Vietnamese dissident who opens Paul's eyes to life's bigger issues; classism, Paul soon discovers, remains a problem no matter what your size. ALL THE MONEY IN THE WORLD ★★★ It's impossible to write about All the Money in the World, Ridley Scott's second film this year (after May's Alien: Covenant), without mentioning the behind-the-scenes drama that unfolded in the 11th hour before the picture's release. As originally shot and completed, this fictionalized account of events surrounding the kidnapping of 16-year-old John Paul Getty III (Charlie Plummer) featured Kevin Spacey as the teenager's billionaire grandfather. When serious sexual allegations destroyed Spacey's career, Scott made the unprecedented decision to recast Getty Sr. with 88-year-old pro Christopher Plummer (unrelated to his young co-star), reshoot scenes originally shot more than 6 months ago in a scant nine days and then recut the picture, all in less than a month. When this news broke, I presumed that Getty Sr. wouldn't be in many scenes. I guessed wrong. Approximately 400 new shots featuring the elder Plummer were required, with the bulk of the audio having to be captured on set (and recorded at the same fidelity as the original material if the new and old sound was to merge properly). Obviously, none of this was an easy task, but the octogenarian actor and director both pulled it off, grounded by exceptional work by Michelle Williams, who's the heart of the film playing young Getty III's mother. Alas, if only someone could have removed Mark Wahlberg as former CIA man and negotiator Fletcher Chase, who engages in more of the fabricated heroics the actor is making a career of tastelessly injecting into historical-based tales. (At Boston Common, Fenway, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

CALL ME BY YOUR NAME ★★★★ Actor Timothée Chalamet made an indelible impression in Greta Gerwig's Lady Bird as a nonchalant young preener mixed up with Saoirse Ronan's titular heroine. He may have been too cool for school in Gerwig's triumph, but based on his tentative, internalized work in Call Me by Your Name, the latest romantic masterpiece from Italian filmmaker Luca Guadagnino (2009's I Am Love), it's clear that Chalamet possesses amazing range, and is poised to join Ronan as a breakout star. Based on the acclaimed novel by André Aciman (wonderfully adapted by James Ivory) and set amid the lush green countryside of northern Italy in the summer of 1983, Chalamet plays 17-year-old Elio Perlman. The multilingual musical prodigy enjoys spending lazy days at the Mediterranean cottage of his parents—Annella (Amira Casar), an Italian translator, and Lyle (movingly played by Michael Stuhlbarg), an American archaeology professor specializing in Greco-Roman sculpture—until he forms a fast friendship with Oliver (The Social Network's Armie Hammer), a chiseled and charming American grad student who arrives on the scene to work on his doctorate, helping out as Lyle's live-in intern. Friendship soon blooms into hormonal infatuation, however, and the two forge a deeper bond that will shape the lad's life. Non-judgmental and keenly observed, it's another of the year's best films. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

Coco ★★1/2 With its 19th film in in 22 years, Pixar Animation Studios has finally addressed the lack of ethnic diversity in its movies, having already tackled another deficiency with Brave and Inside Out, a pair of pictures that featured strong starring roles for female protagonists. Now, at a time when talk of building a wall along the Mexican border continues, it's nice to see a family film take pains to humanize our neighbors to the south without coming off as a polemic. So it's unfortunate that Coco—Pixar's colorful celebration of Mexico's people, cultures and traditions—lacks the emotional core of some of the studio's finest efforts. Despite a gorgeous adventure that journeys from the Land of the Living to the Land of the Dead and back, Coco ranks with The Good Dinosaur and the aforementioned Brave, minor works that, while dazzling to look at, failed to fully engage the heart. Starring a rebellious 12-year-old, aspiring singer and self-taught guitarist Miguel Rivera (voiced by newcomer Anthony Gonzalez), the film opens in a fictional Mexican village during Día de Muertos (or "Day of the Dead"), before a curse sends Miguel and his endearingly daft dog to an imaginatively realized underworld populated by cuddly cadavers. It's just a shame that the storytelling can't quite match Director Lee Unkrich (Toy Story 3) and co-director Adrian Molina's superbly rendered visuals. And for all the focus on music, the original songs surprisingly underwhelm. It says a lot that a maudlin ballad entitled "Remember Me" would prove so unmemorable. Kind of like the film. (At Assembly Row, Fenway, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Darkest Hour ★1/2 The second Winston Churchill biopic of the year (after Brian Cox's commanding but little-seen turn in Jonathan Teplitzky's Churchill) and the third film to feature the evacuation at Dunkirk (after Lone Scherfig's delightful Their Finest and Christopher Nolan's time-shuffling Dunkirk), this is also the worst of the lot. That's not a terribly surprising revelation since the film is from director Joe Wright, whose love of the stage hasn't translated particularly well to the screen, as evidenced by his last two pictures, Anna Karenina and Pan. Just as turgid as both of those, Darkest Hour is a clear Oscar-grab for Gary Oldman, who puzzlingly moves with a swiftness of step that would be stunning even coming from someone half of Churchill's age and girth. Buried under mounds of nevertheless impressive makeup, Oldman's prime minister seems just as unstoppable as the Nazi forces that are rolling through Europe. And all of life's a speech, even when he decides to rub elbows with the Common Man in the London Underground. The entire film is rather silly and cartoonish, and just the type of historical drama the Academy might eat up. Overlit by cinematographer Bruno Delbonnel (who's usually much better than this), the film is weighted down with artificiality, which extends to Wright's staging of the Dunkirk retreat. I wouldn't be surprised to find that Oldman's fat suit is filled with pork, since this is the hammiest performance he's given in quite some time. He might have smelled an Oscar, but his performance reeks of Eau de Oscar Mayer. (At Kendall Square.)

The Disaster Artist ★★★1/2 Perhaps you've heard of The Room. Frequently cited as one of the worst films ever, this 2003 drama-cum-accidental comedy has been selling out raucous midnight shows on weekends for years—as the poor ushers at the Coolidge Corner Theatre can attest, stuck as they are cleaning up the hundreds of plastic spoons that have been thrown toward the screen. (Don't ask.) The film stars writer/director Tommy Wiseau, a vaguely European-accented man (he claims he's from New Orleans) who displays no real talent either in front of or behind the camera, though he's embraced his notoriety as a modern-day Ed Wood. And like Tim Burton's 1994 biopic of that ambitious but troubled filmmaker, director/star James Franco's The Disaster Artist is a ridiculously entertaining portrait of a mysterious man with delusions of genius, as seen by Wiseau's co-star in The Room and then-best friend, Greg Sestero (played here by James' younger brother Dave), who penned the memoir this film is based on. Franco dons facial prosthetics, long dark hair and ever-present sunglasses as he completely inhabits this oddball, a man whose only previous exposure to cinema seems to be a couple of films starring Marlon Brando and James Dean. Light as air and co-starring many of Franco's friends—from Seth Rogen to Paul Scheer and cameos by dozens more—it's a fun behind-the-scenes romp, even if you've never seen the film it's sending up. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Lady Bird ★★★★ If you liked last year's highly praised The Edge of Seventeen, a delicate comedic drama about high school life for an awkward teen girl, you'll love the similarly themed, yet even more perceptive coming-of-age tale, Lady Bird. The stunning, semi-autobiographical writing/directing debut of Greta Gerwig—a wonderfully idiosyncratic actress who penned the strong screenplays for 2012's Frances Ha and 2015's Mistress America, a pair of films she also starred in for her partner of six years, director Noah Baumbach—is easily one of the year's best films. One of the better directorial decisions she made was to retain those movies' cinematographer, Sam Levy, but her best decision of all: Hiring two-time Oscar nominee Saoirse Ronan (the 23-year-old star of Brooklyn) to portray Christine "Lady Bird" McPherson. Like Gerwig, Lady Bird was 17 in 2002, and living in Sacramento, "the Midwest of California," while not-so-secretly dreaming of moving to New York. Christine's also fond of claiming she lives on "the wrong side of the tracks," which sets up one of the film's many big laughs when her first boyfriend (Lucas Hedges, an Oscar nominee for last year's Manchester by the Sea) meets her mother (Laurie Metcalf from TV's Roseanne, in her best role in years) and observes that "I always thought that was, like, a metaphor, but there are actual train tracks." Bittersweet and truthful, this is one to see with your mom. (At Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Pitch Perfect 3 ★★1/2 More of a cartoon than its predecessors, and with considerably lower stakes, the third and supposedly final Pitch Perfect picks up with the Barden Bellas as they aimlessly drift through post-college life. Series star Becca (one-time Oscar nominee Anna Kendrick, who needs a better agent) isn't satisfied as a music producer, so she quits her dream job to rejoin her old a cappella group on a reunion tour through Europe after the father of Aubrey (Anna Camp), a military brat, finds them a spot on a USO tour. It turns out the Bellas are back to their competitive ways, since the tour is doubling as a contest to find a new opening act for DJ Khaled, who plays himself. No one in the Bellas seems particularly interested in winning, though—especially Fat Amy (Rebel Wilson, still a comic highlight), who wanders off for much of the picture in a goofy side plot involving her long-lost dad (John Lithgow, saddled with a dodgy British accent). Thankfully, it's still a lot of fun to watch (and hear) the Bellas, from Brittany Snow's Chloe to Hailee Steinfeld's Emily, even if every character's a bit more broadly played this time in a plot that barely holds together. The outtakes that appear during the end credits show snippets of whole scenes that were cut, likely pointing to a rough go for director Trish Sie (Step Up: All In), who stepped in for Elizabeth Banks. Despite this, the Pitch Perfect 2 director still provides snark from the sidelines with John Michael Higgins. (At Boston Common, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

The Shape of Water ★★1/2 This romantic fantasy from Guillermo del Toro (writer/director of Pan's Labyrinth) takes a page out of Ron Howard's Splash, a romantic fantasy involving a lovelorn man who falls for a mermaid and their flight from government officials who regard the aquatic creature as something subhuman. But the Mexican filmmaker flips the script, focusing on a human heroine who falls for her amphibian prince. But unlike Splash, this 1962-set fairy tale isn't a comedy; sudden spurts of blood occasionally add crimson to the film's aquatic color palette, along with flashes of flesh. This ain't Disney territory, folks. Sally Hawkins wonderfully inhabits Elisa Esposito, a mute cleaning woman who works in a bunker-like government research facility alongside chatty Zelda Fuller (Octavia Spencer), who acts as her mouthpiece, translating her sign language as the plot requires. Elisa also shares a friendship with her neighbor, Giles. Heartbreakingly played by Richard Jenkins, he's a closeted gay man who doubles as the film's narrator. But it's images rather than words that introduce us to Elisa and her daily routine: waking at dusk, then masturbating in her tub during the time it takes to boil the eggs she uses to entice the new (mer)man in her life, an "asset" being studied (and abused) in the lab she mops. As the fish-out-of-water, it's a pity actor Doug Jones doesn't become more than an elaborate special effect—and neither composer Alexandre Desplat's Amélie-like accordion cues nor del Toro's overcooked direction can compensate for a shallow character that should have made a bigger splash. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Wonder Wheel ★★ Forget the fact that Woody Allen has once again made a film that seems to hold his personal life under a microscope—a creative type contemplates leaving his middle-aged lover for her young stepdaughter—and you'll still find that he's repeating himself, badly. He trots out at least one movie a year, recycling ideas that he handled better in earlier decades. So it's a shame that as he ages (he's 82), the themes that he keeps exploring have become downright hackneyed compared with the adventuresome visual approach he's taken with his past two pictures. Legendary cinematographer Vittorio Storaro, who deservedly won Oscars for The Last Emperor, Reds and Apocalypse Now, sumptuously photographed last year's Café Society and now Wonder Wheel. In his time, the Italian master shot better-looking film than most, and he's doing the same with digital photography now that he's adopted the newer medium. The warm, saturated images evoke a '50s-era Coney Island that likely only exists in people's imaginations, and here, the colors and light magically change with characters' moods. It's a sight to behold, and I'd recommend seeing it on the biggest screen possible. Just be aware that the blue-collar schlubs played by Kate Winslet, Jim Belushi, Juno Temple and Justin Timberlake (as the Allen surrogate/narrator) appear to have wandered in from a junior high-mounted Tennessee Williams play. You've been warned. (At Coolidge Corner.)

MUSIC

Edited by Nathan Tavares

LIVING FOR LANA Lana Del Rey's newest album, Lust for Life, has the songstress shedding the sepia tones of nostalgia for the urgency of the here and now. Though she still spins in her familiar wheelhouse with songs that conjure images of white Mustangs and summer nights, she surprises with offerings such as "Change" and "When The World Was at War We Kept Daneing"—both elear responses to the eurrent political elimate. Other standouts inelude collaborations with The Weeknd on the title traek and the dreamy Carpenters-like ballad "Beautiful People Beautiful Problems" with Stevie Nieks. Grab your American flag and ride off into the sunset with Lana Del Rey at the TD Garden on Jan. 13. / Nathan Tavares

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Julia Aparicio

EYE FOR AN EYE In his first solo show at the Alpha Gallery, Dave J. Bermingham presents the eye-catching On a Clear Day (You Can See Forever), using mixed media and subtle symbolism to speak to larger social issues. His series Occhi, named for the Italian word for eyes, features circular sculptures with doorknobs that peer out at onlookers like colorful irises. It's paired alongside his other kaleidoscope-like structures that are crafted from household objects commonly associated with women and arranged in gravity-defying clusters intended as a commentary on the male gaze. Keep an eye out for Bermingham's mesmerizing exhibit, on display through Jan. 3. / Hannah McKennett

CHEW ON THIS

Few evenings compare to Boston Medical Center's Food for Thought Gala, an eye-opening and thought-provoking holiday meal, sans the crazy, annoying relatives.

Held at the Mandarin Oriental, the evening attracted the likes of major donors Steve and Joan Belkin, the flawless Amy Fisher, Teutonic uber-babe Molly Schoeck, Four Seasons head honcho Bill Taylor and the gorgeous Karyn, Back Bay chatelaine Jeryl Oristaglio, the Karger twins, Wes and Paul, with their respective other halves, Ashley Karger and Melissa Donovan, IVF pioneer Merle Berger and his political activist wife, Bonnie, the ethereal Mary Wolfson, catering mogul Dan Mathieu and the absurdly handsome Tom Potter, mega-philanthropists Randi and Joel Cutler, newlyweds Sam Mendoza and Yarden Fraiman, and mistress of ceremonies Heather Unruh, to name a mere smattering.

Dinner was delicious, and the speaking program had the crowd dabbing their eyes and scratching their heads, as they learned the latest about the Grow Clinic and BMC, including the fact that the new rooftop farm produced five thousand pounds of food in its first year. The evening's best remark came after a guest had red wine spilled on him. His response: "No worries. It'll hide the blood stains."

DENTISTS' DELIGHT

A recipe for a highly entertaining Sunday afternoon: In the ballroom of the Mandarin Oriental, mix a boatload of kids hopped up on sugar with some super-competitive parents, stir in some local chefs and celebrities, and give them an hour in which to decorate a gingerbread house.

The Home for Little Wanderers' ninth annual Gingerbread Competition (which The Improper was proud to sponsor) kicked off their yearly Big Wishes Gift Drive, and as always, it was a highly festive affair. Present and accounted for: the super-generous Farrington family (all in matching aprons), teal-eyed stunner Julie-Hume Gordon, peerless party girl Laura Baldini, latter-day Farrah Fawcett Dianna Reza, banking heartthrob Rick Musiol, Back Bay babes Christy Cashman and Mahsa Noble, gorgeous blonde Sofia Ostrer, radio blabbermouth David O'Leary, WCVB beauties Shayna Seymour and Rhondella Richardson, CEO Joan Wallace-Benjamin, Channel 7 hotties Erica McDermott and Kimberly Bookman, first lady of Red Sox Nation Linda Pizzuti Henry, all the major league franchises' mascots, more adorable little humans than you could shake a shillelagh at, and one woman who said, "If you put this gingerbread house on the market in Back Bay, I'll bet you could get more than $10 million for it."

The competition was undeniably fierce, but the afternoon's big winners were the amusingly named Team Sweet Tarts, who took first place for best (ab)use of candy. The afternoon's snarkiest exchange, meanwhile: When one guest said, "My husband is still in bed," a friend said, "Oh. With whom?"

MY HUSBAND'S KEEPER

Q: How do you get all of Boston's top socialites to Fenway Park long after the baseball season has ended?
A: Take it to the Max with the annual benefit for the Max Warburg Courage Curriculum, which was held in the Dell EMC Club.

The evening attracted the likes of exquisite blond event chair Hilary Sargent, founders Stephanie and Jonathan Warburg with son, Fred, and his stunning wife, Beckett, Chestnut Hillion Kasey Kaufman, brunette Bond Girl Evelyn Treacy, blue-blooded beauty Molly Stout and her beloved brother, Harry Storer, Cambridge panjandrum Graham Gund, the perfectly lovely Adrienne Camire, arts patron Diane Schmalensee, equestrienne extraordinaire Mary Chilton Crane and her other half, Eric Morse, Back Bay doyenne Emily Rooney, bewitching blonde Tiina Smith and her adoring other half, Larry Rand, former U.S. ambassador to Austria Swanee Hunt, and honoree Uri Berenguer (a Max fellow who came to the U.S. for cancer treatment and now serves as the Spanish announcer for the Red Sox).

A video that was screened left not a dry eye in the house, and the rest of the evening inarguably hit it out of the ballpark. But the highlight was definitely when a fire alarm went off, forcing everyone to evacuate onto Yawkey Way and summoning the Boston Fire Department. As one guest put it, "It's not a party without some hunky firefighters."

The evening's best comment came when one guest asked another where her spouse was. "I know he's out of town," she answered. "Is it bad that I'm not exactly sure where?"

NIFTY FIFTY

It was a strictly A-list crowd that turned out at the Four Seasons for the 50th Anniversary of the Museum of African American History.

Co-chaired by power-pair Colette Phillips and Priscilla Douglas, the afternoon honored biotech mogul Tony Coles and Harvard professor Sara Lawrence-Lightfoot. On hand to offer their congratulations: Gov. Charlie Baker, the telegenic Karen Holmes Ward, bedazzling real estate broker Deborah Bernat, privacy expert Agnes Bundy Scanlan, former YWCA head honcha Marti Wilson-Taylor, political activist Nancy Korman, heavily bearded hipster Byron Rushing, banking bigwig Sushil Tuli, force of nature Kathy Taylor, restaurateur Darryl Settles and his flawless physician wife, Lisa Owens, crack journalist Carmen Fields, past honorees Wayne Budd and Carol Fulp, and just about every other person of color and consequence within a 50-mile radius.

The afternoon's best remark: "I'd rather wait till I'm dead to be called a Living Legend." ◆
